113. "Ye shall have an honest ephah and an honest hin" (Lev. 19:36). R. Yose son of R. Judah asked: Why say "honest hin"?[10] Is not a hin included in the measurement of an ephah? Yes, but it suggests that your yea (hen) should be as honest as your nay.[11]

114. When a man fulfills his given word, the sages are pleased with him.[12]

115. The sages said: He who has requited the people of the generation of the flood, the people of the generation of the dispersion of men, the people of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the Egyptians at the Red Sea will requite him who does not stand by his word.[13]

116. R. Yose said: I never said something and then retracted it.[14]

117. The letters alef, mem, and tav, which form the word emet, "truth," rest on two legs, while the letters shin, kof, and resh [which form the word sheker, "falsehood"], rest on one leg, in order to suggest that what is done in truth is firmly based and what is done in falsehood is not. The letters that form the word emet are far apart,[15] while the letters that form the word sheker closely follow one another, in order to suggest that it is difficult to act in truth, while falsehood is as close as one's ear.[16]

118. Such is the punishment of a liar—even when he speaks the truth, no one listens to him.[17]

119. Rabbah said in the name of R. Yohanan: [In the alphabetical acrostics in Lamentations], why does the letter pe precede the letter ayin? Because of the spies, who uttered with their mouth [peh], what they had not seen with their eye [ayin].[18]

120. Hezekiah said: How do we know that he who adds [to the word of God] subtracts from it? From the verse "God hath said: 'Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it.' " (Gen. 3:3). But R. Mesharsheya maintained: We derive it from a single word in the verse "Ammatayim [two cubits] and a half shall be the length thereof" (Exod. 25:10);[19] while R. Ashi said: We derive it from two words in the verse "ashte esreh [eleven] curtains" (Exod. 26:7).[20]

121. Weigh carefully what you say before you say it.[1]

122. Teach your tongue to say, "I do not know," lest you be led to lie, and be caught.[2]

123. Love the term "perhaps" and hate the expression "How much [harm will it do me]?" R. Hidka put this in another way: Love the term "perhaps" and hate the expression "[If I sin], what of it?"[3]

124. R. Zera said: A man should not say to a child, "I will give you something," and then not give it to him, because he will thus teach the child to lie, as in the denunciation "They teach their tongue to speak lies" (Jer. 9:4).[4]

125. Rav was constantly tormented by his wife. When he said to her, "Prepare some lentils for me," she would prepare beans; [when he requested] beans, she would prepare lentils. After Rav's son, Hiyya, grew up, he took to reversing his father's requests, until finally Rav said to his son, "Your mother has improved [her behavior toward me]." R. Hiyya confessed, "It was I who reversed your requests when I reported them to her." At that, Rav remarked, "What you have done bears out the saying 'Your offspring in season may teach you reason.' Nevertheless, do not continue to do so, lest you become like those of whom Scripture says, 'They have trained their tongues to speak falsely' " (Jer. 9:4).[5]

126. Rava said: At first, I used to think that there was no truth in the world. But a disciple of the wise, R. Tavut—others say, R. Tavyomi—by name, who would not lie even if he were given all the treasures of the world, told me that he once came to a place called Kushta ("Truth"), where no one ever departed from the truth and where no man ever died before his time. He married one of their women, with whom he had two sons. One day, his wife was sitting and washing her hair when a neighbor, a woman, came and knocked on the door. Thinking to himself that it would not be good manners [to tell her that his wife was washing her hair], he called out, "She is not here." [As a punishment for this], his two sons died. Then people of that town came to him and questioned him, "What is the cause of this?" He related to them what had happened. "We beg of you," they said, "quit this town, and do not incite the angel of death against us."[6]

127. "And when Delilah saw that he had told her all his heart" (Judg. 16:18). How did she know? R. Hanin said in the name of Rav: [Words from the heart], words of truth, are readily recognized.[7]

128. When something is not readily evident, it is made so by citing numerous sources.[8]

129. People say that in Media a camel can dance on a kav.[9] Here is a kav, here a camel, and here we are in Media—but the camel does not dance![10]

130. People do not lie about what is certain to become known.[11]

131. "And speaketh the truth in his heart" (Ps. 15:2), as, for instance, R. Safra did.

It is told of R. Safra that he had an article to sell, and a certain man came to him while he was reciting the Shema and said, "Let me have the article for such-and-such a price." When R. Safra did not answer, the would-be purchaser, thinking that R. Safra was unwilling to sell for the price offered, kept increasing the amount, saying, "Let me have it for more money." After R. Safra finished the Shema, he said, "Take the article at the price you mentioned first, for I was willing to sell it to you at that price."[12]

132. The Holy One hates him who says one thing in his mouth, and another in his heart.[13]

133. "He who acknowledges the truth" applies to Moses, as is said, "And when Moses heard that, it was well-pleasing in his sight" (Lev. 10:20). So, too, the Holy One acknowledges the truth, as when He said, "The daughters of Zelophehad speak right" (Num. 27:7).[14]

134. The entire world, all of it, was shaken when the Holy One said at Sinai, "Thou shalt not take the Name of the Lord thy God in vain" (Exod. 20:7). With regard to all other transgressions mentioned in the Torah, the hope is held forth that their violator will be held guiltless, but of this one it is said, "The Lord will not hold him guiltless" (ibid.). For all other transgressions mentioned in the Torah, only the transgressor is punished, but for this one, he and his entire family are punished. For all other transgressions mentioned in the Torah, only the transgressor is punished, but for this one, he and the entire world, all of it, are punished. For all other transgressions mentioned in the Torah, if the transgressor has any merit, sentence is suspended for two or three generations,[15] but for this one, he is punished at once.[16]

135. "[The curse] shall enter . . . the house of him that sweareth falsely by My Name . . . and it shall consume it with the timber thereof and the stones thereof" (Zech. 5:4). Hence you learn that a false oath consumes even things that neither fire nor water can consume.[1]

136. "Yes, yes" is an oath. "No, no" is an oath.[2]

137. It is not right for a man to swear an oath even for the truth.[3]

138. R. Judah reported in the name of Rav that, in a year of scarcity, a certain man deposited a gold denar with a widow, who put it in a jar of flour. Subsequently [she forgot it], baked the flour, and gave [the loaf] to a poor man. In the course of time, the owner of the denar came and said to her, "Give me back my denar." She replied, "May death seize upon one of my sons if I have derived any benefit for myself from your denar." Not many days passed—so it is told—before one of her sons died. When the sages heard of the incident, they remarked: If such happens to one who swears truly, what must be the fate of one who swears falsely![4]

139. It happened that a man who had deposited a hundred denars with Bar Telamion came to get them back. Bar Telamion said, "I have already turned over to you what you deposited with me." The man said, "Come [to the synagogue], and I will have you take an oath." What did Bar Telamion do? [On the sly], he took a cane, hollowed it out, put the hundred denars in it, and then leaned on it as if it were a walking stick. When he reached the synagogue, he said to the man, "Hold this cane in your hand, while I swear an oath to you." [Then he said, "I swear by the] master of this house that I have given back to you what you deposited with me." In his rage, the man threw the cane on the ground, and the hundred denars began to roll out. As the man set to gathering them, Bar Telamion said, "Gather them, gather them, it's your own you are gathering!"[5]

140. "Hereby shall ye be proved: as Pharaoh liveth, ye shall not go forth hence," etc. (Gen. 42:15).[6] When Joseph was about to swear falsely, he would say, "As Pharaoh liveth." R. Levi explained the matter by the parable of a kid of the goats that ran away from the pasture and entered the home of a widow. What did she do? She killed it, flayed it, placed it on a bed, and covered it with a sheet. When they came to ask her about the kid, she replied, "May I cut off the flesh of this one lying here and eat it, if I know anything about the kid."[7]

141. R. Giddel said in the name of Rav: What is the proof that one may swear to observe a precept? From the verse "I have sworn and have confirmed it, to observe Thy righteous ordinances" (Ps. 119:106).

But why? Has not a Jew been sworn to observe them ever since Sinai? True; but the verse shows that a man may [by an oath] stir his zeal to observe them.[8]

142. R. Akiva said: Vows serve as a hedge for abstinence.[9]

143. R. Giddel said in the name of Rav: He who merely says [without using the standard formula for making a vow], "I will rise early and study this chapter [of Mishnah] or study this tractate [of Talmud]," is deemed to have made a solemn vow to the God of Israel.

R. Giddel said further in the name of Rav: He who merely says to his friend, "Let us rise early and study this chapter," is obliged to rise early.[10]

144. He who makes a vow is as though he put a chain [of iron] about his neck.[11]

145. The sages taught: Do not ever get into the habit of making vows, for you will end up violating even oaths.[12]

146. R. Yannai said: If a man delays fulfilling his vow, his ledger [in heaven] is examined.[13]

147. We have been taught that R. Nathan said: He who vows is as though he built a high place [for an idol] and he who fulfills his vow[14] is as though he brought an offering upon it.[15]

148. R. Dimi the brother of R. Safra said: He who vows, even if he fulfills his vow, is called a sinner. R. Zevid asked: And the proof? "If thou shalt forbear to vow, it shall be no sin in thee" (Deut. 23:23): hence, if you do not forbear, it shall be a sin.[16]

Refined Speech and Lascivious Talk

149. The sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: A man should always use refined speech: "Thou shalt choose the tongue of the subtle" (Job 15:5); "That which my lips know they shall speak in purity" (Job 33:3).[17]

150. R. Joshua ben Levi said: A man should never let an unseemly word issue from his mouth. Thus, speaking in a roundabout way, Scripture added eight letters in order to avoid uttering an unseemly term, as in the verse "Of clean beasts, and of beasts that are not clean"[1] (Gen. 7:8). R. Papa said: Even nine letters, as in the verse "If there be among you any man that is not clean[2] by reason of that which chanceth him by night" (Deut. 23:11).[3]

151. Two disciples sat before Hillel. One was Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai—others say it was before Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch], and that one was R. Yohanan.[4] The second of the two disciples asked, "Why must we vintage [grapes] in vessels that are clean, yet may gather [olives] in vessels that are unclean?" The first asked [the same question without using the objectionable term "unclean"]: "Why must we vintage [grapes] in vessels that are clean, but need not gather [olives] in vessels that are clean?" Their teacher said, "I am certain that this one [pointing to the first disciple] will be an authorized teacher in Israel." It did not take long before he was indeed an authorized teacher in Israel.

There were three priests. One said, "I received as much as a bean [of the shewbread]"; the second said, "I received as much as an olive"; while the third said, "I received as much as a lizard's tail." The lineage of the third priest was investigated, and a disqualification was found in it.[5]

152. Two disciples sat before Rav. One said, "You made the subject as savory for us as a stuffed pig." The other said, "Your analysis has made me [as tired] as a kid out of breath." Rav would not speak to the first disciple after that.[6]

153. The sages used only genteel language.[7]

154. In punishment for obscene speech, troubles multiply, cruel decrees are proclaimed anew, the young men of Israel—may such things happen to their enemies—die, and the fatherless and widows cry out and receive no answer. For it is said, "Therefore the Lord shall have no joy in their young men, neither shall He have compassion on their fatherless and widows; for everyone is profane and an evildoer, and every mouth speaketh obscenity. For all this His anger is not turned away, but His hand is stretched out still" (Isa. 9:16).[8]

155. R. Hanan bar Rava said: All know why a bride enters the bridal chamber, yet when a man speaks obscenely of it, even if a decree of seventy years' happiness had been sealed for him, it is reversed into [seventy years of] misery.

Rabbah bar Shila said in R. Hisda's name: When a man fouls his mouth with obscenity, Gehenna is made deeper for him, as is said, "A deep pit is for the mouth that speaketh obscenity" (Prov. 22:14). R. Nahman bar Isaac said: Also for him who hears it and remains silent.[9]

156. Our masters taught: A man should not allow his ears to listen to chitchat, because [being delicate] they are, of all parts of the body, the first to "catch fire."[10]

157. Bar Kappara expounded: What is meant by "And thou shalt have a plug among thy weapons" (Deut. 23:14)? Read not azenekha,[11] "thy weapons," but oznekha, "thine ear," meaning that when a man hears something unseemly, he must place his fingers into his ears. This counsel is in keeping with what R. Eleazar said: Why do a man's fingers resemble plugs? In order to suggest that when a man hears something unseemly, he should plug his ears with his fingers.

The sages taught in the school of R. Ishmael: Why is the entire ear hard and the lobe soft? In order that when a man is about to hear something unseemly, he can plug his ear with the lobe.[12]

158. R. Eliezer ben Jacob said: When a handsome and distinguished man allows an unseemly word to issue from his mouth, what is he like? A large [and well-appointed] dining hall with a tanner's [ill-smelling] drainpipe running through its middle.[13]

159. When R. Kahana fell ill, the sages sent R. Joshua son of R. Idi to find out how he was doing. When he came in and found that R. Kahana had died, he rent his garment but reversed it as he went out weeping, so that the rent part would not be noticed. When he came back to the sages, they asked him, "Is he dead?" R. Joshua: "It was you who said it. I did not say it, for 'he that uttereth evil tidings is a fool' " (Prov. 10:18).[14]

160. Rav was the son of R. Hiyya's brother and the son of R. Hiyya's sister.[15] When Rav came up to the Land of Israel, R. Hiyya asked him, "Is your father still alive?" Rav replied, "You might ask, 'Is Mother still alive?' "[16] "Well, is your mother still alive?" R. Hiyya asked. Rav replied, "Is Father still alive?" At that, R. Hiyya said to What should he have said?

"Last year the wheat crop did well," or, "The lentil crop is doing well."[4]

Silence and Speech

162. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: I spent all my life among sages and found nothing better for a person than silence. He who talks too much brings on sin.[5]

163. R. Akiva said: Silence is a hedge protecting wisdom.[6]

164. Bar Kappara taught: Silence is seemly for the wise, all the more so for fools. Thus Solomon said, "Even a fool, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise" (Prov. 17:28). And it goes without saying that it is so when a wise man holds his peace.[7]

165. R. Isaac said: What is meant by "What is politic for men? Silence, yet speak ye the truth" (Ps. 58:2)?[8] It means: What is good policy[9] for a man in this world? To make himself out as mute.[10] Lest it be thought that a man should also remain mute in debate on Torah, the psalm goes on to say, "Yet speak ye the truth."[11]

166. All chitchat is bad, except chitchat about Torah, which is good.[12]

167–68. "A time to keep silence, and a time to speak" (Eccles. 3:7). There are times when a man is silent and receives reward for his silence; and there are other times when a man speaks up and receives reward for speaking up.[13]

169. The story of a peddler who went around the villages of Sepphoris hawking his wares, crying, "Who'd like the elixir of life?" Everybody gathered around and implored him, "Give us the elixir of life." While seated in his reception chamber, busily explaining the literal meaning of Scripture, R. Yannai heard the peddler crying, "Who'd like the elixir of life?" He called out, "Come up here and sell it to me!" The peddler: "Not to you nor to the likes of you." But R. Yannai insisted, so the peddler came up to him, took out a book of Psalms, and showed him the verse "Who is the man that desireth life?"' (Ps. 34:13) and what is written after it: "Keep thy tongue from evil." As he read these words, R. Yannai remarked, "Solomon also proclaimed the same when he said, 'Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue keepeth his soul from troubles,' " (Prov. 21:23).

Then R. Yannai added, "All my days I have been reading this verse, but I did not realize its plain meaning until this peddler came by and made me aware of it."[14]

170. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said to his slave Tabi, "Go to the market and buy me a good piece of meat." So Tabi went out and bought him a tongue. Later, R. Simeon said to Tabi, "Go out and buy me a bad piece of meat at the market." Tabi went out and again bought him a tongue. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel asked him, "Why, when I asked you to buy me a good piece of meat, did you buy a tongue, and when I asked you to buy a bad piece of meat, did you again buy me a tongue?" Tabi replied, "Because from the tongue comes good, and from it comes also evil. When it is good, nothing is better than it; and when it is bad, nothing is more evil than it."[15]

171. "Death and life are in the power of the tongue" (Prov. 18:21). Akila the Translator[16] defined the tongue as a tool having a knife at one end and a spoon at the other[17]—death at one end and life at the other. Even so Ben Sira said, "Blow on a coal to make it glow, or spit on it to put it out; both results come from the same mouth" (Ecclesiasticus 28:12).[18]

172. Rava said: He who wishes to live [can acquire life] through his tongue; he who wishes to die [can find death] through his tongue.[19]

173. A story is told of a king of Persia who became so emaciated that he was about to die. His physicians said, "There is no cure for you until you are brought some milk of a lioness. Drink it, and you will recover." So the king asked the physicians, "Who will fetch some milk of a lioness?" One of them spoke up and said, "If you wish, I will go, but first you must give me ten goats." They gave him the goats, and he went to a lions' den, where a lioness was sucking her whelps. The first day, he stood at a distance and threw one goat to her, which she devoured. The second day, he came a little closer and threw another goat. And thus he continued day after day. At the end of ten days, he was so close to the lioness that he could play with her and stroke her teats. Thus he drew off some of her milk and went on his way.

Halfway on his journey home, the physician fell asleep and saw in a dream the parts of his body arguing with one another.

The feet were saying, "Among all the parts, there is none like us. Had we not walked, the body would not have been able to fetch any of the milk."

The hands retorted, "There is none like us. Had we not stroked the lioness, the body would not have been able to get any of the milk."

The eyes argued, "We are of greater worth than any of you. Had we not shown him the way, nothing at all would have been accomplished."

Then the heart spoke up: "I am of greater worth than any of you. Had I not given counsel, you would not have succeeded at all in the errand."

Finally, the tongue spoke up and said, "I am better than any of you. Had it not been for speech, what would you have done?"

At that, all the parts of the body joined in responding to the tongue, "How dare you compare yourself with us, you who are lodged in a place of obscurity and darkness—you who, unlike all other parts of the body, have not a single bone?"

But the tongue replied, "This very day you are going to acknowledge that I have power over you!"

After the man woke up from his sleep, he kept the dream in mind and continued on his way. When he came back to the king, he said, "Here is the bitch's milk which I managed to get for you. Drink it."

Immediately the king became angry with the physician and ordered that he be hanged. As he went out to be hanged, all the parts of his body began to tremble. The tongue said to them, "Did I not tell you that there is nothing substantial in you? If I save you now, will you admit that I have power over you?"

They all cried out, "Yes!"

At this, the tongue said to the hangmen, "Take me back to the king." They took the physician back to the king, and he asked him, "Why did you order me hanged?"

The king replied, "Because you brought me the milk of a bitch."

The physician said to the king, "What does that matter to you, as long as it provides healing? Besides, a lioness can be called a bitch."

The milk was taken, tested, and found to be the milk of a lioness.

The king drank it and was healed, and the physician was dismissed in peace.

At that, all the parts of the body said to the tongue, "Now we confess to you that you have power over us all. This is the meaning of the verse "Death and life are in the power of the tongue" (Prov. 18:21).[1]

174. Our masters taught: Two advocates used to stand before Hadrian, one pleading that speech is best, and the other pleading that silence is best. The one said, "Sire, nothing in the world is better than speech. But for speech, how would brides be extolled? How could there be in the world the give-and-take of trade? How could ships sail in the sea?" Then the king asked the one who pleaded that silence was best, "How do you plead in behalf of silence?" As soon as he started to speak, his colleague struck him on the mouth. The king asked, "Why did you strike him?" He replied, "Sire, I pleaded in behalf of what is mine by means that are mine—by speech in behalf of speech. But this one would plead in behalf of what is his by my means. Let him plead in behalf of what is his by means that are his."[2]

175. R. Judah of the village of Gibboraya—according to some, of the village of Gibbor-hayil—interpreted "Silence is praise for Thee" (Ps. 65:2) as meaning that silence is the height of all praises of God.

When R. Dimi came [to Babylonia], he reported: In the West [the Land of Israel], they say: Speech is worth a sela, but silence is worth two.[3]

176. Ten measures of speech came down to the world: Women took nine, and the rest of the world, all of it, took one.[4]

177. Even the common talk of Israel is worthy of study.[5]

178. Even the common talk of the people of the Land of Israel is worthy of study.[6]

179. Even the sages' talk concerning profane matters deserves study.[7]

180. From the articulation of your lips, it is evident that you are a disciple of the wise.[8]

181. Silence is tantamount to admission [of guilt].[9]

182. Silence validates [a woman's vow], but silence cannot nullify [it].[10]

Anger

183. R. Eliezer said: Be not easily provoked.[1]

184. There are four kinds of dispositions: easy to provoke and easy to reconcile—his loss is compensated by his gain; hard to provoke and hard to reconcile—his gain is offset by his loss; hard to provoke and easy to reconcile—saintly; easy to provoke and hard to reconcile—wicked.[2]

185. Rabbah bar R. Huna said: When a man is angry, even the Presence is deemed by him as of no account, as is said, "At the height of his wrath, the wicked thinks, 'God never punishes,' for all his schemes are based on: 'There is no God' " (Ps. 10:4). R. Jeremiah of Difti said: He also causes his learning to be forgotten and his folly to grow, as is said, "For anger resteth in the bosom of fools" (Eccles. 7:9). Besides, R. Nahman bar Isaac added: It is well known that his transgressions come to be more abundant than his merits, as is said, "A wrathful man aboundeth in transgression" (Prov. 29:22).[3]

186. Resh Lakish said: When a man becomes angry—if he is a sage, his wisdom departs from him; if he is a prophet, his prophecy departs from him. That his wisdom departs from him if he is a sage we learn from Moses, for after saying, "And Moses was wroth with the officers of the host," etc. (Num. 31:14), it is said, "And Eleazar the Priest said unto the men of war . . . that went to the battle: 'This is the statute of the law which the Lord hath commanded Moses.' " etc. (Num. 31:21). From the above, it follows that [since Moses was not the one who spoke], the statute had escaped Moses' memory. That his prophecy departs from him if he is a prophet we learn from Elisha, who said in anger, "Were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor see thee" (2 Kings 3:14). [But overcoming his anger, and joyous because he obeyed God's command], Elisha said: " 'Now bring me a minstrel.' And it came to pass, when the minstrel played, that the hand of the Lord [i.e., the spirit of prophecy] came again upon him" (2 Kings 3:15).

R. Mani bar Pattish said: When a man becomes angry, even if greatness has been decreed for him by Heaven, he is reduced from his greatness. How do we know it? From Eliab, for it is said, "Eliab's anger was kindled against David, and he said: 'I know thy presumptuousness, and the naughtiness of thy heart' " (1 Sam. 17:28). And when Samuel went to anoint David as king, it is written of all his other brothers, "The Lord hath not chosen this one" (1 Sam. 16:8), but it is written of Eliab, "The Lord said unto Samuel, 'Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature, because I have rejected him' " (1 Sam. 16:7). Hence it follows that until Eliab became angry, God had favored him greatly.[4]

187. He who succumbs to anger succumbs to bad judgment.[5]

188. R. Huna said: Moses became angry in three instances, and [following each] a law escaped his memory. The instances involved a law about observance of the Sabbath, a law about the purification of unclean metal utensils, and a law about the conduct of a mourner prior to the burial of his dead.

What is the proof that, through anger, Moses forgot to speak of a law about the observance of the Sabbath? [From what happened when the manna was eaten after it first came down.] At that time, we are told, "some of them left it until morning . . . and Moses was angry with them" (Exod. 16:20).[6] Having become angry, a law escaped his memory, and he forgot to speak of a contrary law affecting the Sabbath, for [when the Sabbath came] he said to them, "This is what the Lord hath spoken: . . . 'Eat today [what was left from the prior day], for today is a Sabbath unto the Lord' " (Exod. 16:23 and 16:25). [Moses did not say, "This is what I have spoken," but, "This is what the Lord hath spoken," for he himself had forgotten to speak of it.]

What is the proof that, through anger, Moses forgot to speak of a law regarding the purification of unclean metal utensils? From what happened following the war against Midian. We are told, "Moses was angry with the officers of the host" (Num. 31:14), and in his anger a law escaped his memory, so that he forgot to speak to them of a particular law governing [the purification of unclean] metal utensils. Since Moses did not speak of it to them, Eleazar the Priest had to do so in Moses' stead, as Scripture says, "Eleazar the Priest said unto the men of war: 'This is the statute of the law which the Lord hath commanded Moses' " (Num. 31:21), implying that Eleazar meant: "It was to my master Moses—not to me—that God gave the command."

What is the proof that, through anger, Moses forgot to speak of a law about the conduct of a mourner before the burial of his dead? [From what happened when Nadab and Abihu died, and their brothers Eleazar and Ithamar refused to eat consecrated food.] At that time, we are told, "Moses was angry with Eleazar and with Ithamar" (Lev. 10:16), and, having become angry, he forgot to speak of the law that, prior to the burial of his dead, a mourner may not eat consecrated food. At that, Aaron set forth to Moses an argument a fortiori: a man is asked to declare of the tithe, which is of lesser sanctity: "While in mourning, I have not eaten of it prior to the burial of my dead" (Deut. 26:14). How much more by far should a restriction in eating a sin offering, which is of greater sanctity, apply to such a mourner! As soon as "Moses heard that, it was well-pleasing in his sight" (Lev. 10:20), and he issued a proclamation to the entire camp of Israel, saying, "I made an error in the law, and Aaron my brother came and set me straight."[7]

189. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Yohanan: When a man becomes angry, all sorts of Gehenna's evils overpower him, as is said, "If thou removest anger from thy heart, thou puttest away evil from thy flesh" (Eccles. 11:10).[1]

190. A man should always be gentle like Hillel, not irascible like Shammai.[2]

191. Do not seethe with anger, and you will not sin.[3]

192. We have been taught that the sages said in the name of R. Yohanan ben Nuri: You are to regard as an idolater the man who in his anger tears his garments, in his anger smashes his vessels, in his anger scatters his money, because such is the craftiness of the impulse to evil. One day, the impulse says to him, "Do this"; the next day, "Do that"; until finally it says, "Go, worship an idol," and the man goes and worships it. R. Avin said: And the proof? The verse "There shall be no strange god in thee; then thou shalt not worship an alien god" (Ps. 81:10). What strange god is there within a man's body? You must admit, it is the impulse to evil.[4]

193. Once, in the synagogue in Tiberias, it happened that R. Eleazar and R. Yose differed so sharply about a certain ruling that in their rage a Torah scroll got torn. R. Yose ben Kisma, who was there, said, "I shall be surprised if this synagogue does not become a house of idolatry." And so it did.[5]

194. R. Akiva used to say: He who in a rage hurls his bread to the ground or scatters his money will not leave the world before he becomes dependent on [the charity of] mortals.[6]

195. R. Adda bar Ahavah saw a gentile woman in the marketplace who was wearing a garment of linsey-woolsey.[7] Thinking she was Jewish, he stopped and ripped the garment off her. When it turned out that the woman was heathen and the garment was appraised at four hundred zuz [which he had to pay], he asked her, "What is your name?" Upon her replying, "Mattun," he said to her, "Mattun, had I been wary (matun), it would have been worth [to me] maatan, maatan (twice two hundred) zuz."[8]

196. R. Yose taught in Sepphoris: "Abba Elijah [the Prophet] is an irascible man." After that, Abba Elijah, who used to visit him regularly, absented himself for three days and did not come. When he finally did come, R. Yose asked him, "Why did my master not come?" Elijah replied [angrily]: "Because you called me irascible." R. Yose: "You, sir, have just proved yourself to be irascible."[9]

197. Bar Kappara taught: A man who is bad tempered achieves nothing but his bad temper.[10]

198. Our masters taught: There are three kinds of men whose life is no life: those who are [too] compassionate, those who are [too] prone to anger, and those who are [too] fastidious.[11]

199. When his disciples asked R. Adda bar Ahavah, "To what do you attribute your long life?" he replied, "I never lost my temper in the midst of my family."[12]

200. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] made a feast for his disciples, serving them tongues that were tender as well as tongues that were tough. The disciples selected the tender tongues and passed up the tough ones. So he said to them: Take heed of what you are doing—even as you select the tender and pass up the tough, so let your tongues be tender [and not tough] toward one another.[13]

201. A man's character may be discerned by three things: by his tippling, his tipping, and his temper.[14]

202. In the West [the Land of Israel], when two men were quarreling with each other, people watched to see who would be first to stop and would then say, "This one is of better lineage."[15]

203. Happy is the man who, hearing himself abused, remains silent. He thereby wards off a hundred evils from himself.[16]

204. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: Do not try to pacify your fellow in the hour of his anger.

R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yose: What is the proof that one should not try to pacify a person in the hour of his anger? The verse "After My countenance goes, I will give thee rest" (Exod. 33:14), in which the Holy One says to Moses, "Wait awhile until My countenance of wrath goes away; then I will give thee rest."[17]

Humility and Pride

205. R. Levitas of Yavneh said: Be very, very humble, for the end of man's hope is the worm.

R. Meir said: Be humble before all men.[18]

206. Our masters taught: Adam was created on the eve of Sabbath, [the last of all created beings]. Why? So that if man's opinion of himself should become overweening, he would be reminded that the gnat preceded him in the order of creation.[1]

207. Whenever Rav saw a crowd [of scholars] follow him [as he was about to enter the court], he would quote, "Though his excellency mount up to the heavens . . . yet he shall perish forever like his own dung" (Job 20:6–7).

As he was carried shoulder high on the Sabbath preceding a festival, Mar Zutra the Pious used to quote, "Riches are not forever; and doth the crown endure unto all generations?" (Prov. 27:24).[2]

208. The following three are of equal importance: wisdom, fear [of God], and humility.[3]

209. The adornment of wisdom is humility; the adornment of humility is fear [of God].[4]

210. R. Isaac ben Eleazar said: That which wisdom has made the crown of her head, humility has made the imprint of her heel. That which wisdom has made the crown of her head, as Scripture says, "The fear of the Lord is the head of wisdom" (Ps. 111:10); humility has made the imprint of her heel, as Scripture says, "The fear of the Lord is humility's heel"[5] (Prov. 22:4).[6]

211. R. Joshua ben Levi said: Humility is greater than all other virtues,[7] for it is said, "The spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to bring good tidings unto the humble" (Isa. 61:1)—not "unto the saintly," but "unto the humble." From this you learn that humility is greater than all other virtues.[8]

212. When a house has no lower doorsill, it looks unfinished, left to fall apart. You, too, even if you are endowed with all other virtues but lack humility, are "unfinished."

Rava said: Even as the lower doorsill makes it possible for doors to close and open, so is humility a hedge protecting [the doors of] wisdom.[9]

213. R. Joshua ben Levi said: Pause and consider how great the lowly in spirit are in the presence of the Holy One. For in the days the Temple stood, when a man brought a burnt offering, the reward for a burnt offering was his; a meal offering, the reward for a meal offering was his. But the man whose disposition is lowly—Scripture regards him as though he had brought all the offerings, all of them, as is said, "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit" (Ps. 51:19).[10]

214. "For My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are My ways your ways" (Isa. 55:8). When a mortal has a vessel, he rejoices in it as long as it is entire; when it is broken, he has no use for it. Now, what is the Holy One's precious vessel? Man's heart. When the Holy One sees a man proud in heart, He has no use for him, as is said, "Everyone that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord" (Prov. 16:5). But when the heart is broken, He says, "This one is Mine," as is said, "The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart" (Ps. 34:19).[11]

215. "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit" (Ps. 51:19). R. Abba bar Yudan said: Everything that the Holy One declared unfit in animals, He declared fit in man. In animals, He declared unfit the "blind, broken, or maimed" (Lev. 22:22); but in man, he declared fit the broken and contrite heart.

R. Alexandri said: If an ordinary person uses broken vessels, it is a disgrace to him; but the vessels the Holy One uses are broken ones, as is said, "The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart" (Ps. 34:19); "Who healeth the broken in heart" (Ps. 147:3); "I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit" (Ps. 57:15); "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit" (Ps. 51:19); and "A broken and contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise" (ibid.).[12]

216. R. Joseph said: A man should always learn from the reasoning of his Maker. Behold, the Holy One disregarded all mountains and hills, and caused His Presence to abide on Mount Sinai, even as He disregarded all goodly trees and caused His Presence to abide on a thornbush.[13]

217. Bush, O bush! Not because you are taller than any of the trees in the field did the Holy One cause His Presence to abide on you, but because you are lower than any of the trees in the field did the Holy One cause His Presence to abide on you.[14]

218. R. Abba said in the name of Samuel: For three years there was a dispute between the school of Shammai and the school of Hillel, the one asserting, "The law is according to our views," and the other asserting, "The law is according to our views." Then a divine voice came forth and said, "The utterances of the one and of the other are both the words of the living God, but the law is according to the school of Hillel."

But since both are the words of the living God, by what merit did the school of Hillel have the law fixed according to their rulings? Because they were kindly and humble, and taught both their own rulings and those of the school of Shammai.[1] Indeed, they taught the rulings of the school of Shammai before their own.

This should prove to you that the man who humbles himself, the Holy One exalts; and the man who exalts himself, the Holy One humbles. From everyone who tries to thrust himself upon eminence, eminence flees. But upon everyone who flees from eminence, eminence thrusts itself. Everyone who tries to force time, time forces back. But everyone who is willing to abase himself before the hour [of success],[2] the hour [of success] remains waiting for him.[3]

219. "Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not cause him to be seen? saith the Lord" (Jer. 23:24). R. Benjamin bar Levi said: The man who sits in a secret place and occupies himself with Torah, I cause to be seen [and honored] by mortals; by the same token, the man who conceals himself to worship idols, I cause to be seen [and abhorred] by mortals.[4]

220. Ben Azzai said: You will be called by your proper name, you will be seated in your proper place, and you will be given what is properly yours, for no man will be allowed to touch what belongs to another, just as no reign will be allowed to overlap another by a hairsbreadth.[5]

221. R. Akiva used to teach in the name of R. Simeon ben Azzai: Go two or three seats lower than what you believe to be your seat until you are told, "Come up," rather than sit above [your seat] and be told, "Get down."[6] It is better to be told, "Come up, come up," than to be told, "Get down, get down." This, too, is what Hillel used to say: "My abasement of self is my exaltation, my exaltation of self is my abasement." And the proof? "He that exalteth himself is [made to] sit lower, he that abaseth himself is [raised, so that he may be] seen" (Ps. 113:5–8). You find that when the Holy One revealed Himself to Moses from the midst of the thornbush, Moses hid his face from Him. Because of this, the Holy One said to him, "Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh" (Exod. 3:10).[7]

222. When R. Nahman bar R. Hisda said to R. Nahman bar Isaac, "Sir, come up and sit with us," R. Nahman bar Isaac replied, "We have been taught that R. Yose said: A man's place does not honor a man, but a man honors his place. We find this to have been true of Mount Sinai: as long as the Presence abode upon it, the Torah declared, 'Let neither flocks nor herds feed before the mount' [Exod. 34:3]; but once the Presence departed from there, the Torah said, "When the ram's horn soundeth long, they may come up to the mount' [Exod. 19:13]. We also find it to have been true at the Tent of Meeting in the wilderness: as long as the tent remained pitched, the Torah commanded, 'Remove from camp anyone with an eruption or a discharge' [Num. 5:2]; but once its curtains were rolled up [dismantling the tent], both those with a discharge and those with an eruption were allowed to enter." "If so," said R. Nahman bar R. Hisda, "I shall come to sit with you, sir." R. Nahman bar Isaac objected: "It is better for an eminent scholar who is the son of a less eminent scholar to come sit with an eminent scholar who is the son of an eminent scholar, than for an eminent scholar who is the son of an eminent scholar to come sit with an eminent scholar who is the son of a less eminent scholar."[8]

223. A proverb says, "Be head among foxes and not tail among lions."

However, R. Matia ben Heresh said: Be tail among lions and not head among foxes.[9]

224. They sent word from there [the Land of Israel]: Who is destined for the world-to-come? He who is meek and humble, bows on entering and on leaving, continually occupies himself with Torah, and takes no credit to himself. At that, the sages cast their eyes on R. Ulla bar Abba [as endowed with such qualities].[10]

225. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yose ben Zimra: To him who invokes his own merit in making a petition, Heaven makes its response depend on the merit of others; whereas to him who invokes the merit of others in making a petition, Heaven makes its response depend on his own merit. Moses invoked the merit of others in his petition, for he said, "Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, Thy servants!" (Exod. 32:13), and Scripture made Heaven's response depend on Moses' own merit: "Therefore He said that He would destroy them, had not Moses His chosen stood before Him in the breach" (Ps. 106:23). On the other hand, Hezekiah invoked his own merit in his petition: "Remember now, O Lord, I beseech Thee, how I have walked before Thee" (Isa. 38:3), and God made His response depend on the merit of others, for God said, "I will

226. "Thou didst pluck up a vine out of Egypt" (Ps. 80:9). As in a vine with larger clusters and smaller ones, each large cluster hangs lower than its smaller neighbor, so do Israel: He who is greater than his fellow holds himself to be below him.[2]

227. R. Joshua of Sikhnin said in the name of R. Levi: The other rivers asked the Euphrates, "Why is your sound not very audible?" The Euphrates replied, "I have no need for loud sound: my deeds make me known. When a man plants a sapling at my side, it matures in thirty days; when he sows a vegetable at my side, it is full grown in three days." Then the other rivers asked the Tigris, "Why is your sound so audible?" The Tigris replied, "I wish my sound were heard yet more clearly, so that people would be aware of me." Then they asked the fruit-bearing trees, "Why is your sound not very audible?" They replied, "We do not need to make loud sound, since the fruits we bear testify for us." Then they asked the trees that do not bear fruit, "Why is your sound so audible?" They replied, "We wish our sound were heard yet more clearly, so that people would be aware of us."

R. Huna differed: The preceding explanations do not give the real reason. The fact is that, because fruit-bearing trees are heavy with their fruit, the sound they make is not very audible; while trees that bear no fruit are lightly laden, and so the sounds they make are very audible.[3]

228. "For as the crackling of thorns under a pot" (Eccles. 7:6). When all other kinds of wood are kindled, their sound is not heard; but when thorns are kindled, their sound crackles forth, as though they were saying, "We, too, are wood."[4]

229. A single coin in a bottle goes clink-clink.[5]

230. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Yohai said: A man should speak of his superiority with a soft voice and of his shortcomings with a loud voice; of his superiority with a soft voice, as may be seen in the confession at tithing;[6] of his shortcomings in a loud voice, as may be seen in the confession at the bringing of firstfruits.[7]

231. Rava said: A man may make himself known in a place where he is not known, as Obadiah did, saying to Elijah, "I, thy servant, fear the Lord from my youth" (1 Kings 18:12).

Then Rava pointed to what appears to be an inconsistency. Here we have "I, thy servant, fear the Lord from my youth," and elsewhere, "Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth" (Prov. 27:2). Rava explained: The second verse refers to a place where the man is known, while the first verse refers to a place where the man is not known.

Rava also said: A disciple of the wise may say, "I am a disciple of the wise—put my lawsuit first on the docket."[8]

232. Our masters taught: A man should always be as yielding as a reed and not as unyielding as a cedar.

Now, a reed grows in a well-watered area. Its stock keeps driving up young shoots. And because its roots are many, even if all the winds of the world come and blow at it, they cannot uproot it from its place, for it sways to and fro with them. And once the winds have subsided, the reed resumes its erect stance.

On the other hand, the cedar does not grow in a well-watered area, it does not drive up new shoots, and its roots are few. Still, even if all the winds of the world come and blow at it, they cannot move it from its place. If, however, the [hot] south wind blows at the cedar, it uproots it at once and lays it flat on its face.[9]

233. R. Abba bar Kahana said in the name of R. Levi: He who sets himself head-on against a wave is swept away by it; but he who does not set himself head-on against the wave is not swept away.[10]

234. We have been taught that Rabban Gamaliel said: Once, while traveling on a ship, I saw another ship capsize, and I grieved greatly for a disciple of the wise who was on the ship. (Who was the disciple? R. Akiva.) After I landed, there was R. Akiva, who sat down and held forth before me concerning certain rulings in Halakhah. I asked him, "My son, who rescued you?" He replied, "A ship's plank came my way; and as each wave came toward me, I dipped my head under it."[11]

235. R. Eleazar ha-Kappar said: Be not like the upper lintel, which no man's hand can touch; but be like the threshold below, upon which everyone steps—in the end, when the entire structure is demolished, it still remains.[12]

236. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: A man who has haughtiness within him is as though he had worshiped an idol, for Scripture says, "Every haughty person is an abomination unto the Lord" (Prov. 16:5), and says elsewhere of an idol, "Thou shalt not bring an abomination into thy house" (Deut. 7:26).

On his own authority, R. Yohanan said: A man who is guilty of such haughtiness is as one who denies the Root of the universe, for of him it is said, "When thy heart wax haughty, thou forgettest the Lord thy God" (Deut. 8:14).[1]

237. R. Hisda (according to some, Mar Ukba), said: Of a man who has haughtiness within him, the Holy One says, "I and he cannot endure together in the world." He declared, "Whoso is haughty of eye and proud of heart, him I cannot endure" (Ps. 101:5). Read not "him" (oto), but "together with him" (itto).[2]

238. R. Eleazar said: The Presence wails over a man who has haughtiness within him.[3]

239. He who walks even four cubits with a haughty bearing is as though he had pushed aside the feet of the Presence, of which it is written, "The whole earth is full of His glory" (Isa. 6:3).[4]

240. Concerning the despotic, the haughty, the proud, the violent, the insolent, and the aggressive, Scripture says, "The arms of the wicked shall be broken" (Ps. 37:17).

Of those who coo like doves, who make affected gestures with their hands, who kick up their heels and walk mincingly on their toes, Scripture says, "Let not the foot of pride overtake me, and let not the hand of the wicked drive me away" (Ps. 36:12).[5]

241. He who walks into the marketplace with his shoes unlaced is among those who are of haughty spirit. He who walks with his cloak thrown over his shoulder or his cap tilted back, or sits crosslegged, or holds the straps of the tefillin in his hands and throws them behind him while walking in the marketplace—he is among those who are of haughty spirit.[6]

242. R. Alexandri said: The least wind will greatly trouble a man who has haughtiness of spirit,[7] for it is said, "The wicked [haughty ones] are like the troubled sea" (Isa. 57:20). Now, if the sea, which contains so many quarters of logs of liquid, is troubled by the least wind, how much more a human being, who has only a quarter of a log of blood.[8]

243. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: When a man boasts, if he is a sage, his wisdom departs from him; if he is a prophet, his gift of prophecy departs from him.[9]

244. R. Avira expounded: He in whom there is haughtiness of spirit will presently be reduced in rank, as is said, "They are exalted, then a reduction [in rank]" (Job 24:24). What is meant by "They are cut off as the topmost of ears of corn" (ibid.)? A sage in the school of R. Ishmael taught: It is like a man who, entering his field, plucks the topmost ears.[10]

245. R. Eleazar said: Any man in whom there is haughtiness of spirit deserves being cut down like an asherah [a tree sacred to a goddess].[11]

246. R. Levi said: He who is given to boasting is rightly punished by fire, as is said, "This is the law regarding a person given to making himself high—it is that he go up on its burning place" (Lev. 6:2).[12]

247. R. Eleazar said: He in whom there is haughtiness of spirit will not have his dust stirred [at the resurrection], for it is said, "Awake and sing, ye that dwell with the dust" (Isa. 26:19). It is not said, "Ye that dwell in the dust," but, "Ye that dwell with the dust"—each of whom during his life had made himself dwell [in humility] as a neighbor to dust.[13]

248. Bar Kappara expounded: What is meant by the verse "why teratzedun [look ye askance] ye mountains of lofty peaks" (Ps. 68:17)? That a divine voice came forth and said to the other mountains, "Why do you seek litigation [tirtzu din] with Sinai? Compared to Sinai, all of you are blemished." Said R. Ashi: From this we learn that he who regards himself as being lofty is a blemished person.[14]

249. Nebuchadnezzar said: It is not worth living among the inhabitants of the world. I will provide myself a small cloud and live in it: "I will ascend upon the heights of a cloud" (Isa. 14:14). The Holy One said to him, "Thou saidst in thy heart: I will ascend into heaven," etc. (Isa. 14:13)—I will bring you down to the pit of destruction. You said: It is not worth living among the inhabitants of the world. "Thou shalt be driven from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field, and thou shalt be made to eat grass as oxen . . . and seven times shall pass over thee, till thou know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever He will" (Dan. 4:22).[15]

ters of Israel began to wed the arrogant, for our generation looks only at that which is for show.

Is that really true? Behold, he who is arrogant, a master declared, is not acceptable even to members of his own household, as is said, "An arrogant man abideth not at home" (Hab. 2:5), even in his own home.

At first a daughter of Israel jumps at the opportunity to wed such a one, but in the end he becomes repulsive to her.[1]

251. Poverty in Torah is a sign of arrogance.[2]

252. A poor man who is proud—that, the mind cannot comprehend![3]

253. Why are the tallest of the tall and the lowest of the low—the cedar and the hyssop—used in the ritual cleansing of a leper? Because when a man exalted himself like a cedar, he was smitten with leprosy; and when he humbled himself like hyssop, he was healed with hyssop.[4]

Shamefacedness and Brazenness

254. We have been taught: "That the fear of Him may be ever with you" (Exod. 20:20), meaning: shamefacedness; "that ye sin not" (ibid.), implying that shamefacedness brings to fear of sin. Hence, the sages inferred that shyness is a good sign in a man.

Others say: He who has a feeling of shame will not readily sin; whereas he who has no feeling of shame—it is certain that his forebears did not stand at Mount Sinai.[5]

255. There are three signs in this people: they are compassionate, shamefaced, and given to deeds of loving-kindness.[6]

256. Most of those who are of good lineage are shamefaced.[7]

257. Judah ben Tema used to say: The brazen-faced is destined for Gehenna, but the shamefaced for the Garden of Eden.[8]

258. Ulla said: Jerusalem was destroyed only because its inhabitants had no shame of one another: "They shall be put to shame because they have committed abomination; yea, they are not at all ashamed, neither know they how to blush; therefore shall they fall among them that fall" (Jer. 6:15).

R. Isaac said: Jerusalem was destroyed only because the small and the great were made equal, as is said, "Like people, like priest" (Isa. 24:2), which is followed in the next verse by "Therefore shall the earth be utterly emptied.[9]

259. R. Dimi said: Isaiah cursed Israel with eighteen curses, yet he was not content until he said, "The child shall behave insolently against the aged, and the base against the honorable" (Isa. 3:5).[10]

260. Rabbah bar Huna said: Anyone who is brazen-faced may be called "wicked," as is said, "He who makes his face brazen is wicked" (Prov. 21:29). R. Nahman bar Isaac said: One may hate him, as is said, "The brazenness of his face is to be changed" (Eccles. 8:1). Read not yeshunneh, "is to be changed," but yissane, "is to be hated."[11]

261. Since he is so insolent, he is clearly wicked.[12]

262. R. Nahman said: Impudence avails even against Heaven. Thus, at first God said to Balaam, "Thou shalt not go with them" (Num. 22:12). But finally [giving in to Balaam's insistence] He said, "Rise up, and go with them" (Num. 22:20).

R. Sheshet said: Impudence is kingship without a crown. Thus David admitted, "I am this day weak, though anointed king; and these men, the sons of Zeruiah, are too powerful for me" (2 Sam. 3:39).[13]

263. "And Memucan said" (Esther 1:16). From the fact that he [the least of the king's advisers] was the first to speak, it may be inferred, said R. Kahana, that an ignorant man scrambles to the head of the line.[14]

264. It is better that you be put to shame by yourself than be put to shame by others.[15]

265. R. Abba of Caesarea said: To be put to shame by one's own self is not the same as to be put to shame by others.[16]

266. Ten people get together to steal a beam and feel no shame in the presence of one another.[17]

Joy and Sadness, Frivolity and Levity

267. "Then I commended joy" (Eccles. 8:15)—the joy in obeying a precept. "But of [another kind of] joy, I said, 'What doeth it?' " (Eccles. 2:2)—joy not associated with performing a precept. This should prove to you that the Presence rests neither in the midst of sadness, nor in the midst of idleness, nor in the midst of frivolity, nor in the midst of levity, nor in the midst of chitchat, nor in the midst of inane talk, but only in the midst of joy in obeying a precept, as is shown by Elisha. [After Elisha became angry at the king of Israel (2 Kings 3:13–14), his power of prophecy left him. But then, when he overcame his anger, he found such joy] that he said, " 'Now bring me a minstrel. And it came to pass, when the instrument played, that the hand of the Lord [the power of prophecy] came back to him" (2 Kings 3:15).[1]

268. "If there is anxiety in a man's mind, let him quash it (yash'hennah)" (Prov. 12:25). R. Ammi and R. Assi differed on how he is to go about it. One said: Let him banish it from his mind (yasihennah); the other said: Let him speak about it (yesihennah) to others.[2]

269. R. Beroka of Khuzistan used to frequent the marketplace of Be Lapat,[3] where Elijah often appeared to him. Once he asked Elijah, "Is there anyone in this marketplace who is to have a portion in the world-to-come?" Elijah replied, "No."

In the meantime, two men came by, and Elijah said, "These two will have a place in the world-to-come." R. Beroka went over to them and asked them, "What is your occupation?" They replied, "We are jesters. When we see people depressed, we cheer them up; and when we see two people quarreling, we work hard to make peace between them."[4]

270. In the marketplace of Zion, a disciple was following R. Ishmael son of R. Yose, who noticed that he seemed to be fearful and said to him: You must be a sinner, since it is said, "The sinners in Zion are fearful" (Isa. 23:14). The disciple: But is it not also said, "Happy is the man that feareth alway" (Prov. 28:14)? R. Ishmael: That is said about words of Torah.

Judah bar Nathan was following R. Hamnuna, who noticed that he was sighing. So he said to him: You wish to bring affliction upon yourself, since it is said, "The thing which I did fear is come upon me" (Job 3:25). Judah replied: But is it not also said, "Happy is the man that feareth alway?" That, R. Hamnuna replied, is said about words of Torah.[5]

271. Rav said: A sigh breaks half of a man's body, for it is said, "Sigh therefore, thou son of man, with the breaking of thy loins" (Ezek. 21:11). But R. Yohanan said: Man's entire body, for it is said, "And it shall be, when they say unto thee: Wherefore sighest thou? that thou shalt say: Because of the tidings, for when it cometh, every heart shall melt" (Ezek. 21:12).[6]

272. Tears caused by weeping are harmful; tears caused by laughter are beneficial.[7]

273. "And the clouds return after the rain" (Eccles. 12:2). Scripture refers to the light in man's eyes, which is lost after weeping.[8]

274. Rejoicing is designated by ten different terms: joy, gladness, merriment, a ringing cry, leaping, exulting, a shrill cry, jubilation, a resounding cry, shouting.[9]

275. "The heart knoweth its own bitterness, even as with its joy no stranger can intermeddle" (Prov. 14:10). What is meant? Just as the heart first feels the distress which anguishes a man, so, when a man rejoices, the heart is the first to feel the joy.[10]

276. One [occasion for] rejoicing is not to be set at a time when there is another occasion for rejoicing.[11]

277. "Because thou didst not serve the Lord thy God in joyfulness and with gladness of heart" (Deut. 28:47). R. Mattenah said: What service is "in joyfulness and with gladness of heart"? You must conclude that it is [the Levites'] service of song.[12]

278. When the Sanhedrin ceased, song ceased in places of feasting, as is said, "They shall not drink wine with a song" (Isa. 24:9), and it is also said, "When the elders ceased from the gate, the young men ceased from their music" (Lam. 5:15).[13]

279. During the war with Vespasian, the sages decreed against the wearing of crowns by bridegrooms and against sounding the [wedding] drum.

During the war with Quietus,[14] they decreed against the wearing of crowns by brides.

During the last war,[15] they decreed that a bride should not go out in the city [on her way to her groom's house] in a palanquin. But subsequently, other sages permitted it.[16]

281. An inquiry was addressed to Mar Ukba: Where is the proof that [in our days] singing at secular festivities is forbidden? Mar Ukba scratched his reply on the back of the inquiry: "Rejoice not, O Israel, unto exultation, like the peoples" (Hos. 9:1).

Should he not have replied rather with the verse "They shall not drink wine with music" (Isa. 24:9)?

From the second verse, I might have concluded that the use of musical instruments is prohibited, but not singing. From the first verse, one may infer that singing is also prohibited.[2]

282. R. Yohanan said: He who drinks to the accompaniment of four instruments brings sundry punishments to the world, as is said, "The harp and the lute, the tabret and the pipe, and wine are in their feasts" (Isa. 5:12). And what follows directly? "Therefore my people are gone into captivity, for lack of knowledge" (Isa. 5:13).[3]

283. Rav said: The ear that listens to song shall be torn off.

Rava said: Song in the house brings destruction at its threshold: "When a voice sings in the windows, there shall be desolation in the threshold" (Zeph. 2:14).

R. Huna said: Singing by ship haulers and plowmen is permitted, but not singing by weavers.[4]

284. R. Huna abolished singing [at secular festivities], and though a hundred geese came to be priced at only one zuz, and a hundred seah of wheat at only one zuz, there was no demand for them.[5] R. Hisda came and invalidated R. Huna's decree, and a single goose, sought at even as high a price as one zuz, could not be found.[6]

285. R. Joseph said: When men sing and women respond, it is licentiousness. When women sing and men respond, it is fire in tow.[7]

286. Mar the son of Ravina made a marriage feast for his son. When he saw that the sages were getting overly merry, he brought a precious cup worth four hundred zuz and smashed it before them, and they grew serious.

R. Ashi made a marriage feast for his son. When he saw that the sages were getting overly merry, he brought a cup of white crystal and smashed it before them, and they sobered up.

At the wedding of Mar the son of Ravina, the sages said to R. Hamnuna the Younger, "Please, sir, sing us something." He sang, " 'Alas' the cry, for we must die! 'Alas' the cry, for we must die!" They asked him, "What refrain are we to sing after you?" He said, "Sing: 'Where is Torah and where mitzvah to ward us, to guard us?' "[8]

287. Let there be rejoicing at the time of rejoicing, and mourning at the time of mourning.[9]

288. "I will spread dung on your faces, even the dung of your feasts" (Mal. 2:3). R. Huna (according to some, R. Hagga) said: The verse is addressed to those who set aside words of Torah and spend their days at feasts.

R. Levi said in the name of R. Papi, who said it in the name of R. Joshua: Three days [after death], the belly of such a man bursts open, and what is in it falls on his face, as though saying to him, "Take back what you put into me."[10]

289. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: It is forbidden for a man to fill his mouth with laughter in this world, for Scripture says, "Then will our mouth be filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing" (Ps. 126:2). When? "When it will be said among the nations: 'The Lord hath done great things with these' " (ibid.).

It was told of Resh Lakish that, after he heard these words from his teacher R. Yohanan, he never again filled his mouth with laughter in this world.[11]

290. He who undertakes to be an associate scholar (haver) may not be profuse in laughter.[12]

291. Our masters taught: A man should not take leave from his fellow in the midst of ordinary conversation, of levity, of frivolity, or of idle chatter, but should conclude the conversation with a matter of Halakhah. For we find that the prophets of old concluded their utterances with words of praise and consolation. So, too, Mari the grandson of R. Huna taught: A man should leave his fellow only with a matter of Halakhah, so that he may be remembered thereby.[13]

292. R. Akiva said: Raucous laughter and frivolity predispose a person to unchastity.[14]

293. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the wicked, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful" (Ps. 1:1). R. Simeon ben Pazzi commented: If he walks not, how could he be standing on the way?[15] And if he stands not on the way, how could he come to sit in the seat of the scornful? And if he sits not [among them], how could he scoff [with them]? The verse means to tell you, however, that when a man walks [among the wicked], he ends up by standing [with them]; when he stands [among them], he ends up sitting [with them]; and when he sits [among them], he ends up by scoffing [with them]. And when he scoffs, it is of him that Scripture says, "If thou scornest, thou alone shalt bear it" (Prov. 9:12).[1]

294. R. Eleazar said: When a man scoffs, suffering will befall him, as is said, "Now therefore do ye not scoff, lest your punishments be made severe" (Isa. 28:22).

Rava said to the sages: I beg of you, do not scoff, so that no suffering will come upon you.

R. Kattina said: When a man scoffs, his victuals will be diminished, as is said, "He withdraweth His hand from scoffers" (Hos. 7:5).

R. Simeon ben Lakish said: He who scoffs will fall into Gehenna, as is said, "A proud and haughty man, whose name is scoffer, worketh for the wrath with which presumptuousness is punished"[2] (Prov. 21:24). And by "wrath" here, Gehenna is meant, as in "That day is a day of wrath" (Zeph. 1:15).

R. Tanhum bar Hanilai said: Anyone who scoffs brings destruction upon the world, as is said, "Now therefore be ye not scoffers, lest your affliction be made severe, for an extermination wholly determined have I heard" (Isa. 28:22).

Said R. Eleazar: Scoffing is indeed a grievous sin, since its beginning is "affliction" and its end "extermination."[3]

295. R. Simeon ben Pazzi expounded: What is meant by "Happy is the man that hath not walked," etc. (Ps. 1:1)? That he has not walked to the theaters and circuses of idolaters. "Nor stood in the way of sinners" (ibid.)? That he did not stand as a spectator at contests of wild beasts. "Nor sat in the seat of the scornful" (ibid.)? That he did not sit at gatherings of intriguers. Lest such a man say, "Since I do not go to theaters or circuses, nor am I a spectator at contests of wild animals, I will go and indulge freely in sleep," Scripture admonishes, "And in His law shall He meditate day and night" (ibid.).[4]

296. Our masters taught: Those who visit stadiums or entertainments at military camps and witness there [the performance] of diviners and charmers, of clowns and buffoons, of comic muleteers and jesters; and who [participate in] bacchanalian and secular festivities—those are spoken of as being in "the seat of the scornful," and concerning them, Scripture says, "Happy is the man that hath not sat in the seat of the scornful," followed at once by "But his delight is in the law of the Lord" (Ps. 1:1–2). From here you may infer that all such activities invariably cause one to neglect the Torah.[5]

297. R. Hisda said in the name of R. Jeremiah bar Abba: The company of scoffers will not receive the Presence, for it is said, "He stretched out His hand against scoffers" (Hos. 7:5).[6]

298. As soon as R. Yassa came up to the Land of Israel, he went and had his hair cut. When he tried to bathe in the springs of Tiberias, a certain wag struck him from behind on the back of his head. R. Yassa said, "The noose intended for this person still hangs loose." An official happened to be seated there, judging a brigand. So the wag went, stationed himself in front of the brigand, and proceeded to mock him. When the official asked the brigand, "Who was with you?" the brigand, lifting his eyes and seeing the wag mocking him, replied, "This one, who is mocking me, was with me." The wag was immediately seized and put to torture, and he confessed that he had killed a certain man. R. Yassa happened to leave the bathhouse and met the two as they were being taken out, carrying their crosses. The wag said to him, "The noose that was hanging loose is now to be made tight." R. Yassa replied, "O ill-starred one, have you not been told, 'Now therefore be ye not scoffers, lest your cords be made tight' (Isa. 28:22)?"[7]

299. R. Nahman said: All scoffing is prohibited, except scoffing at an idol, which is permitted.[8]

Resignation to Suffering

300. A man is required to bless God for evil, even as he is to bless Him for good, as is said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God . . . with all thy might (meodekha)" (Deut. 6:5). Read rather: "For every measure (middah) that may be measured out to you, thank Him (modeh)."

R. Meir said: What is the proof that, as one is required to bless for good, so is one required to bless for evil? The verse "Thou shalt bless the Lord [of mercy] as well as thy Elohim" (Deut. 8:10)—your Judge,[9] no matter what judgment He decrees for you, whether a measure of prosperity or a measure of suffering.

What is meant by being bound to bless for the evil in the same way as for the good? Shall I say that, just as for good one says the benediction "Who is good and bestows good," so for evil one should say the benediction "Who is good and bestows good"? But we have been taught: For good tidings, one says, "Who is good and bestows good"; for evil tidings, one says, "Blessed be the true Judge." Rava explained: What it really means is that one must accept the evil with gladness. R. Aha said in the name of R. Levi: Where is the proof? From "I will sing of mercy and justice" (Ps. 101:1); be it "mercy," I will sing, or be it "justice," I will sing. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said: We derive it from "In the Lord—I will praise His word:

in God—I will praise His word" (Ps. 56:11). "In the Lord—I will praise His word" refers to the measure of good; "In God—I will praise His word" refers to the measure of suffering. R. Tanhum said: We derive it from "I will lift up the cup of salvation, and call upon the Name of the Lord" (Ps. 116:13) and "I found trouble and sorrow, but I still called upon the Name of the Lord" (Ps. 116:3–4). The sages derived it from "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the Name of the Lord" (Job 1:21).[1]

301. The sages said in the name of R. Meir, and other sages taught it in the name of R. Akiva: A man should accustom himself to say, "Whatever the Holy One does is all for good."

Once, while R. Akiva was traveling, he came to a certain town where he looked for lodgings, but none was given him. So, saying, "Whatever the Holy One does is for good," he went to spend the night in the open field. With him, he had an ass, a cock, and a lamp. A lion came and ate the ass, a cat came and ate the cock, and a gust of wind came up and blew out the lamp. Again he said; "Whatever the Holy One does is all for good." The same night, soldiers came and carried off the inhabitants of the town. Then R. Akiva said to his companions, "Did I not tell you that 'whatever the Holy One does is all for good'?"[2]

302. "You shall not behave toward Me," etc. (Exod. 20:20). R. Akiva said: You shall not behave toward Me as others in sundry lands behave. When prosperity comes to them, they honor their deities, as is said, "Therefore they sacrifice unto their trawl" (Hab. 1:16). But when suffering comes to them, they curse their gods, as is said, "They . . . curse their king and their god" (Isa. 8:21). But you [are to act differently]: when I [your God] bring prosperity to you, give thanks, and when I bring suffering upon you, give thanks.[3]

303. R. Huna said: "Behold, it was . . . good" (Gen. 1:31) refers to the measure of prosperity. "Behold, it was very good": (ibid.) [the addition of "very" includes] the measure of suffering. But can suffering be described as "very good"? It seems incredible. But the fact is, it is through suffering that mortals come to life in the world-to-come. Indeed, Solomon said so: "Reproofs of chastisement are the way to life" (Prov. 6:23). Go forth and see what road leads man to life in the world-to-come. You must say it is the measure of suffering.[4]

304. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: The word "covenant" is mentioned with regard to salt (Lev. 2:13), and "covenant" is also mentioned with regard to suffering (Deut. 28:69). What is intended by the covenant of salt? To sweeten the taste of meat, even as suffering is to purge all of man's iniquities.[5]

305. R. Eliezer ben Jacob taught: Scripture says, "Whom the Lord loveth, He chasteneth, even as a father the son in whom he delighteth" (Prov. 3:12). Pause and consider: What was it that made the son become a delight to his father? You must say it was suffering.[6]

306. Our masters taught: When R. Eliezer fell sick, four elders—R. Tarfon, R. Joshua, R. Eleazar ben Azariah, and R. Akiva—came to visit him.

R. Akiva spoke up and said, "Suffering is precious."[7]

At that, R. Eliezer said to his disciples, "Prop me up, that I may hear [better] the words of Akiva, my disciple, who has said, 'Suffering is precious.' What proof have you, Akiva, my son, for saying it?" R. Akiva replied, "Master, I draw such inference from the verse 'Manasseh was twelve years old when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem . . . and he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord' [2 Kings 21:1–2]. I consider this verse in the light of another: 'These are also the proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah king of Judah copied out [for widespread instruction]' [Prov. 25:1]. Now, is it conceivable that Hezekiah king of Judah taught Torah to the whole world, to all of it, but not to Manasseh, his own son? Of course not! Yet all the pains that Hezekiah took with him and all the labor that he lavished upon him did not bring him onto the right path. Only Manasseh's suffering did so, as is written, 'And the Lord spoke to Manasseh, and to his people; but they gave no heed. Wherefore the Lord brought upon them the captains and the host of the king of Assyria, who took Manasseh captive in manacles. . . . And when [Manasseh] was in distress, he besought the Lord his God, and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers, and He answered his entreaty' [2 Chron. 33:10–13)]. You may thus infer how precious is suffering."[8]

307. R. Nathan son of Joseph said: Chastisements are precious. Because of them, the covenant was made with the children of Israel, as is said, "I will bring you into the crucible[9] of the covenant" (Ezek. 20:37).

R. Nehemiah said: Chastisements are precious, for as offerings make atonement, so chastisements make atonement. Of an offering, it is written, "It shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him" (Lev. 1:4); and of suffering under chastisement, it is written, "The land shall lie forsaken without them . . . while they shall make atonement for their iniquity" (Lev. 26:43). Not only this, but even more! Suffering under chastisement is better than offerings for making atonement, for offerings come out of a man's property, but chastisements fall upon a man's very person.[10]

308. R. Yudan said: It is written, "If he smite out his bondman's tooth, or his bondwoman's tooth, he shall let him go free for his tooth's sake" (Exod. 21:27). Now, if because of such smitings, which affect not man's entire body but only one of his parts, the Torah says, "He shall go free," how much more and more is a man whose entire body is assailed by suffering certain to be set free [in the world-to-come].[1]

309. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: Chastisements are good; because of them, three precious gifts came to Israel, gifts that the nations of the earth desired for themselves. Yet only because of chastisements were the gifts—Torah, the Land of Israel, and the world-to-come—given to Israel. And the proof that the Torah was so given? "Blessed is the man whom Thou chastenest, O Lord, for thereby Thou teachest him Thy law" (Ps. 94:12). And the proof that the Land of Israel was so given? "As a man chasteneth his son, so the Lord thy God chasteneth thee" (Deut. 8:5). And what follows? "The Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land" (Deut. 8:7). And the proof that the world-to-come was so given? "Reproofs by chastisement are the way to [future] life" (Prov. 6:23).[2]

310. The sages said in the name of R. Huna: The more pleased the Holy One is with a man, the more He crushes him with suffering, for Scripture says, "The Lord was greatly pleased with [him; hence] he crushed him by disease" (Isa. 53:10). Now, you might think that this is so even if the man did not accept his suffering with love. Therefore the verse goes on to say, "To see if he regarded himself as an offering for guilt" (ibid.).[3]

311. The sages said in the name of R. Huna: When a man sees that sufferings come upon him, he should examine his conduct. If, in examining it, he finds [wrongdoing in himself], let him repent. If, after examining his conduct, he finds no wrongdoing, let him attribute the sufferings to his neglect of the study of the Torah. If, after attempting to attribute them to such neglect, he finds this could not [have been the cause], he may be certain that his sufferings are the chastenings of [God's] love. For "whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth" (Prov. 3:12).[4]

312. "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers" (Isa. 26:20). Scrutinize the chambers of your heart [and see] why I brought suffering to you, and you will not then raise a cry against the measure of justice.[5]

313. Happy the man who can withstand the test given him, for there is no mortal whom the Holy One does not test. He tests the rich man to see if his hand will be open to the poor; and He tests the poor man to see whether he will be resigned to suffering and not be filled with resentment.[6]

314. R. Jacob bar Idi and R. Aha bar Hanina [differed with regard to the following]. One said: Chastenings of love are such as do not compel cessation of study of Torah, for Scripture says, "Happy is the man whom Thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest out of Thy Torah" (Ps. 94:12). The other said: Chastenings of love are such as do not compel the cessation of prayer, for Scripture says, "Blessed be God, who hath not turned away my prayer, nor His mercy from me" (Ps. 66:20). R. Abba son of R. Hiyya said to the two: This is what R. Yohanan taught: Both are chastenings of love, for Scripture says, "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth" (Prov. 3:12). Then why does it go on to say, "And teachest him out of Thy Torah"? Read not telammedennu, "Thou teachest him," but telammedeinu, "Thou teachest us." You teach us such a conclusion out of Your Torah by reasoning a fortiori from the law concerning a master's knocking out a slave's tooth or blinding his eye. A tooth or an eye is only one of the parts of a man's body, yet [if it is injured], the slave obtains his freedom because of the injury. How much more and more by far is this true of sufferings that purge a man's entire body![7]

315. "Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me" (Ps. 23:4). "Thy rod" is affliction, and "Thy staff" is Torah.[8]

316. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: When a man is engaged with Torah, affliction keeps away from him.[9]

317. R. Alexandri said: There is no man without suffering. How happy is he whose suffering comes through [toil in] Torah, as is said, "Happy is the man whom Thou chastenest, O Lord, while Thou teachest him out of Thy Torah" (Ps. 94:12).[10]

318. When R. Hama saw a blind man sitting occupied with Torah, he said to him, "Peace to you, O freedman." The man replied, "Where did you hear that I am the son of a slave?" R. Hama: "I did not, but I meant that you will be a freedman in the world-to-come."[11]

319. R. Bizna said: There is no man in the world without suffering. When he has a pain in his teeth, he does not sleep; in his eyes, he does not sleep. When he toils in the Torah, he does not sleep. In either case, he is awake. "Happy is the man whom Thou chastenest, O Lord, while Thou teachest him out of Thy Torah" (Ps. 94:12).[12]

320. "For in much wisdom is much vexation," etc. (Eccles. 1:18). As long as a man increases wisdom, he increases vexation, and as long as he increases knowledge, he increases suffering. Hence Solomon said: Through increasing wisdom I have increased vexation for myself, and through increasing knowledge I have increased suffering for myself.

R. Yohanan said: [Solomon's suffering] may be likened to fine linen garments that come from Beth Shean. If one of them becomes slightly soiled, it is regarded as a serious loss. On the other hand, coarse flaxen garments that come from Arbel—should they become soiled, who cares, for what is their value?[1] So, too, in the way of the world, when two men go into an eating place where one eats coarse bread and pulse, while the other eats delicate bread and choice meat, and drinks aged wine, the man who ate fine food is apt to suffer intestinal discomfort, while he who had coarse food is not apt to suffer. Likewise, have you ever seen an ass suffering from chills or a camel suffering from nervous stomach? By whom are such sufferings experienced? Only by human beings.[2]

321. R. Huna said: Suffering is divided into three portions: the patriarchs and all the generations of men took one portion; the generation that lived in the time [of Hadrian's] persecution took the second portion; and the generation of the king Messiah will take the third.[3]

322. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon invoked painful afflictions upon himself, so that even though sixty felt pads were spread under him in the evening [when he went to bed], sixty basins of blood and pus were removed from under him the next morning. Every morning his wife prepared for him a mixture of sixty kinds of fig pap, and after he ate of it, he felt better. However, that evening R. Eleazar would invoke his afflictions back again, saying, "Come back, my brethren and familiars!" And in the morning he would say to them, "Depart, lest you disturb my studies!"[4]

323. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] invoked painful afflictions upon himself for thirteen years, six through stones in the kidneys and seven through scurvy.

Rabbi's steward was wealthier than King Shapur. [So numerous were his cattle that] when he set out fodder for them, their lowing could be heard for three mil; and he deliberately set out their fodder just when Rabbi was entering the privy [so that Rabbi's cries of pain would not be heard]. Yet even so, Rabbi's voice [lifted in pain] was louder than the lowing of the cattle and could be heard even by seafarers [far away].[5]

324. When R. Yohanan fell ill, R. Hanina, went to visit him and asked, "Are your sufferings welcome to you?" R. Yohanan replied, "Neither they nor their reward." R. Hanina: "Give me your hand." R. Yohanan gave him his hand, and R. Hanina raised him up from his sickbed [fully cured].[6]

325. R. Akiva used to say: A king had four sons. One was silent when thrashed; another protested when thrashed; the third begged for mercy when thrashed; and the fourth, when thrashed, said to his father, "Go on thrashing me." The one who remained silent when thrashed—Abraham; the one who protested when thrashed—Job; the one who begged for mercy when thrashed—Hezekiah; the one who, when thrashed, said to his Father, "Go on thrashing me"—David.[7]

326. The man who stubbornly refuses to learn from his suffering must suffer doubly for his stubbornness.[8]

327. Our masters taught: They who are insulted but do not insult, they who hear themselves reviled without replying, they who act out of love and rejoice in suffering—Scripture says of such, "They who love Him will [ultimately] be as the sun when He goeth forth in His might" (Judg. 5:31).[9]

328. R. Abbahu said: A man should always strive to be of the persecuted and not of the persecutors, for among birds none are more persecuted than doves and pigeons, yet only these were declared by Scripture fit for the altar.[10]

329. "When a bullock, or a sheep, or a goat is born" (Lev. 22:27). The Holy One said: A bullock is pursued by a lion, a goat by a leopard, a sheep by a wolf—do not offer to Me any of the pursuers, only of the pursued.[11]

330. "God seeketh that which is pursued" (Eccles. 3:15). R. Huna said in the name of R. Yose: God always seeks [with His love] the pursued. You find that when a righteous man pursues a righteous man, "God seeks him who is pursued." When a wicked man pursues a righteous man, "God seeks him who is pursued." When a wicked man pursues a wicked man, "God seeks him who is pursued." Under all circumstances, He seeks [with love] him who is pursued.[12]

331. R. Meir said: When a man suffers, what expression does the Presence use? "My head is too heavy for Me, My arm is too heavy for Me."[13]

333. "The sorrows of death compassed me (afafuni)" (Ps. 18:5). What is the literal meaning of afafuni? It means "waves of sorrow have come up to the nose."[2]

Another interpretation: Do not read afafuni but 'afafuni—sorrows, swift flying, swoop down like birds ('of) of prey upon me.

Another interpretation: Sorrows come rolling over me like wheels (ofan)—solid and spoked wheels.[3]

334. When afflictions are dispatched to a man, they are adjured: Be sure to arrive only on such-and-such a day, and be sure to depart only on such-and-such a day, at such-and-such an hour, through [the healing effected by] So-and-so, by means of such-and-such a potion.[4]

335. Our masters taught: There are three whose life is no life: he who depends on his neighbor's table, he whose wife dominates him, and he whose body is overwhelmed by afflictions. Some say: Also he who has only one shirt.[5]

336. At what point may [divine] visitations be said to commence?[6] R. Eleazar said: If a man had a garment woven for him to wear, and it does not fit him. Rava the Younger (or, according to others, R. Samuel bar Nahmani) disagreed: Something more unpleasant: If hot wine was ordered, but it was served cold; or if cold wine was ordered, but it was served hot [this is a divine visitation]. Mar son of Ravina said: Even if he finds his shirt turned inside out. Some say: Even if one puts his hand inside his purse expecting to find three coins, but finds only two.[7]

338. Nittai the Arbelite said: Do not delude yourself into thinking that [divine] punishment will not come.[9]

339. The sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: He who has passed forty days without any kind of suffering is [in a manner of speaking] deemed to have received his reward in this world. In the west [the Land of Israel], they say: [He who has passed forty days without any kind of suffering is to know that] suffering [which will effect atonement] still awaits him.[10]

340. Rava said: A man is not held responsible for what he says in the hour of his distress.[11]

341. Sufficient unto the hour is the trouble thereof.[12]

342. Troubles dim the eyes.[13]

343. The later troubles cause one to forget the earlier ones.[14]

344. A proverb says: When your sieve is clogged, strike it.[15]

345. R. Levi said: No trouble comes to a man that does not bring profit to others.[16]

Analysis of Human Traits

346. Whoever possesses these three qualities is of the disciples of Abraham our father; and [whoever possesses] three other qualities is of the disciples of Balaam the Wicked. The disciples of Abraham our father [possess] a generous eye, a humble spirit, and a lowly soul. The disciples of Balaam the Wicked [possess] an evil eye, a haughty spirit, and an overambitious soul.

What is [the difference] in the treatment given to the disciples of Abraham our father and that given to the disciples of Balaam the Wicked? The disciples of Abraham our father enjoy [their share in] this world and inherit the world-to-come, as is said, "That I may cause those that love Me to inherit substance, and that I may fill their treasuries" (Prov. 8:21). But the disciples of Balaam the Wicked inherit Gehenna and descend into the nethermost pit, as is said, "But Thou, O God, wilt bring them down to the nethermost pit; men of blood and deceit shall not live out half their days" (Ps. 55:24).[17]

347. Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai had five [distinguished] disciples, to whom he said: Go forth and discover what characteristic should be cultivated as a way of life. [When they came back], R. Eliezer declared: A generous eye. R. Joshua declared: Being a good friend. R. Yose: Being a good neighbor. R. Simeon: The capacity to consider the consequences of one's action. R. Eleazar [ben Arakh]: A joyous heart. Rabban Yohanan said to them: I prefer what Eleazar ben Arakh has said to what you have said, because his definition includes all of yours.

R. Eleazar ben Arakh: A despondent heart. R. Yohanan said to them: I prefer what R. Eleazar ben Arakh has said to what you have said, because his definition includes all of yours.[1]

348. R. Joshua said: The evil eye, the impulse to evil, and hatred of [God's] creatures put a man out of the world.[2]

349. R. Eleazar ha-Kappar said: Envy, lust, and ambition put a man out of the world.[3]

350. R. Dosa ben Horkinas said: Sleep into the morning, wine at midday, childish chatter, and sitting in at gatherings of the ignorant [amme ha-aretz] put a man out of the world.[4]

351. R. Yudan said in the name of R. Aibu: No man departs from the world with even half his desire gratified. If he has one hundred, he wants to turn it into two hundred, and if he has two hundred, he wants to turn it into four hundred.[5]

352. The Holy One said, "In sundry actions, endeavor to rival Me." But for such rivalry, the world could not endure, for no man would build a house, no man would plant a vineyard, and no man would wed a wife.[6]

353. "Envy is rottenness in the bones" (Prov. 14:30). When a man has envy in his heart, his bones rot; but when he has no envy in his heart, his bones do not rot.[7]

354. Better to die a hundred deaths than to experience envy once.[8]

355. R. Levi said: Six organs serve man—three are under his control, and three are not under his control. The eyes, the ears, and the nose are not under his control: he sees what he does not wish to see, he hears what he does not wish to hear, and he smells what he does not wish to smell. The mouth, the hands, and the feet are under his control: the mouth, if he wishes, will occupy itself with Torah or, if he prefers, slander, revile, and blaspheme. The hands, if he wishes, will distribute charity or, if he prefers, steal and slay. The feet, if he wishes, will walk to synagogues and houses of study or, if he prefers, walk to theaters and circuses.

But when a man has merit, the Holy One has even those organs that are under his control cease to be under it.[9]

356. R. Ilai said: A man's character may be known through three things: his tippling, his tipping, and his temper. Some say: Also through what makes him titter.[10]

357. By three things is a man tested: by his give-and-take in business, by the amount of wine he imbibes, and by the length of his talk.[11]

358. Three the Holy One loves: him who does not show temper, him who does not get drunk, and him who does not insist on his full rights.

Three the Holy One hates: him who says one thing with his mouth and another in his heart, him who knows of evidence in favor of his neighbor and does not testify for him, and him who sees something unseemly in his neighbor and is the only one to testify against him.[12]

359. Four are called wicked: he who raises a hand against his neighbor to strike him, he who borrows and does not repay, he who is brazen-faced, and he who is given to quarreling.[13]

360. R. Jeremiah bar Abba said: Four companies will not receive the Presence: the company of scoffers, the company of hypocrites, the company of liars, and the company of slanderers.[14]

361. Four are hard to put up with: a poor man who is proud, a rich man who falsely denies [a claim against him], an old man who is lecherous, and a leader who without justification would lord it over the community. Some say: Also he who divorces his wife, [remarries her], divorces her again, and remarries her again.[15]

362. [There are] seven things [characteristic] in a man whose mind is imperfectly developed, and seven in a wise man. A wise man does not speak before one who is greater than he in wisdom, does not break in on the words of his fellow, is not hasty to answer, asks what is relevant and answers what is appropriate, speaks on the first [point] first and on the last [point] last, says of that which he has not heard: "I have not heard it," and acknowledges the

364. Hillel used to say: The more flesh, the more worms; the more property, the more anxiety; the more wives, the more witchcraft; the more bondwomen, the more lewdness; the more slaves, the more thievery. On the other hand, the [more] study of Torah, the more life; the more sitting down [to study and contemplate], the more wisdom; the more counsel, the more understanding; the more charity, the more peace. He who has acquired a good name has acquired something that [unlike property] remains his own; he who has acquired words of Torah has acquired for himself life in the world-to-come.[3]

365. "Who teacheth us through the beasts of the earth, and maketh us wise through the fowls of heaven" (Job 35:11). R. CHAPTER FIVE

THE COMMUNITY, THE STATE, AND THEIR REQUIREMENTS

The Individual and the Community

1. Our masters taught: He who sees hosts of Israelites should say, "Blessed be He who discerns secrets," for the mind of each of them is not like the mind of any other, nor is the countenance of each of them like the countenance of any other.[1]

2. Ben Zoma once saw such a host on one of the steps of the Temple Mount. He said, "Blessed be He who discerneth secrets, and blessed be He who has created all these people to serve me." For he used to say: How many labors did Adam have to engage in before he obtained bread to eat! He plowed, he sowed, he reaped; he stacked the sheaves, threshed the grain, winnowed the chaff, selected the good ears, ground [them], sifted [flour], kneaded the dough, and baked. And only then did he eat. Whereas I get up and find all these things done for me. How many labors did Adam have to engage in before he obtained a garment to wear! He sheared the sheep, washed [the wool], combed it, spun it, wove it, dyed the cloth, and sewed it. And only then did he have a garment to wear. Whereas I get up and find all these things done for me. All kinds of craftsmen come early to the door of my house, and when I rise in the morning, I find all these things ready for me.

He also used to say: What does a good guest say? "How much trouble my host has taken [for me]! How much meat he set before me! How much wine he set before me! How many cakes he set before me! And all the trouble he has taken was only for my sake!" But what does a bad guest say: "How much, after all, has my host put himself out? I have eaten one piece of bread, I have eaten one slice of meat, I have drunk one cup of wine! All the trouble my host has taken was only for the sake of his wife and his children."[2]

3. Our masters taught: The verse "And when it halted, he would say, 'Rest O Lord, upon the myriads and thousands of Israel' " (Num. 10:36) teaches that the Presence does not rest on fewer than two thousand and two myriads of Israel.[3]

4. R. Isaac said: Let respect for the community always be with you, for you will note that [when blessing the worshipers], the priests' faces were turned toward the people and their backs were toward the Presence. R. Nahman derived this rule from "Then David the king stood up upon his feet and said: "Hear me, my brethren, and my people.' " (1 Chron. 28:2).[4]

5. Hillel said: Do not separate yourself from the community.[5]

6. Samuel said: A man should never extrude himself from the community.[6]

They Who Labor for the Community and Endeavor to Benefit Its People

7. Rabban Gamaliel son of R. Judah [I] the Patriarch said: All who labor for the community should labor with them for Heaven's sake, for then the merit of the community's forebears will sustain them, and their beneficence will endure forever. And as for you [who labor thus], I regard you as deserving great reward, as though you had accomplished it all [on your own].[7]

8. "A man of heave offerings destroys it" (Prov. 29:4).[8] A man who regards himself as though he were a [holy] heave offering set apart in a corner of the house and says, "What concern have I with the community's burden? What concern have I with their lawsuits? What concern have I with listening to their pleas? My own well-being is my one and only concern"[9]—such a man destroys the world, as is said, "A man of heave offerings destroys it."

A story is told of R. Ammi that, as he was about to depart from the world, his sister's son came to visit him and found him weeping. So he asked him: Master, why are you weeping? Is there Torah that you neither learned nor taught? Look, the disciples you taught are seated in front of you. Is there any act of kindness you failed to do? And beyond all your other qualities, you have removed yourself from adjudging lawsuits; nor have you allowed yourself to be charged with handling the community's needs. R. Ammi answered: My son, for this very reason I weep. I will very likely have to give an account and reckoning because I could have dealt with Israel's lawsuits [and chose not to].[10]

9. When there is a disciple of the wise in a city, all the needs of the community are cast upon him.[1]

10. R. Huna said: If a man stumbles into a transgression for which he incurs the penalty of death at the hands of Heaven, what should he do to stay alive? If he has been in the habit of reading one page of Scripture, let him read two. If he has been in the habit of reciting one chapter of Mishnah, let him recite two. But if he has not been in the habit of reading Scripture or reciting Mishnah, what is he to do to stay alive? Let him go and become either an official of the community or a collector for charity, and he will stay alive. For had Scripture said, "Cursed be he that studieth not," he—may such a thing happen to Israel's foes—would not have been able to stay alive; but it says, "Cursed be he who does not enable the words of this Torah to stand" (Deut. 27:26). Had Scripture said, "[Torah] is a tree of life for those who toil in it," he—may such a thing happen to Israel's foes—would not have been able to stay alive; but it says, "[Torah] is a tree of life to those who uphold it" (Prov. 3:18). Thus, "the shelter of wisdom is assured by the shelter of gifts of money" (Eccles. 7:12).[2]

11. He who leads the many to virtue—no sin shall come about through him; but he who leads the many to sin shall not be given the means to repent.[3] Moses was virtuous and led the many to virtue; therefore, the merit of the many was ascribed to him, as is said, "Because he executed the Lord's design, the merit for Israel's obedience to His ordinances [was ascribed to Moses]" (Deut. 33:21). Jeroboam sinned and caused the many to sin;[4] therefore, the sin of the many was ascribed to him: "All the sins of Jeroboam which he sinned by causing Israel to sin" (1 Kings 15:30).[5]

12. Those in Israel who transgress by defiling their bodies and those among the Gentiles who transgress by defiling their bodies will go down to Gehenna and be punished there for twelve months. After twelve months, their bodies will be consumed and their souls burned, and the wind will scatter their ashes under the soles of the feet of the righteous. But as for the heretics, the informers, and the scoffers, who denied the Torah, denied the resurrection of the dead, abandoned the ways of the community, struck terror in the land of the living, and, like Jeroboam the son of Nebat and his companions, sinned and caused the many to sin—these will go down to Gehenna and be punished there for generations upon generations. Gehenna will be consumed, but they will not be consumed.[6]

The Leader of a Community

13. R. Isaac said: A leader is not to be appointed for a community without its being consulted, for Scripture says, "Consider, the Lord hath called by name Bezalel" (Exod. 35:30). When the Holy One asked Moses, "Moses, do you consider Bezalel suitable?" he replied, "Master of the universe, if he is deemed suitable by You, surely he is for Me." But God said, "Nevertheless, go and consult them." So Moses went and asked Israel, "Do you consider Bezalel suitable for you?" They replied, "Moses our teacher, if he is deemed suitable by the Holy One and by you, surely we must consider him so."[7]

14. Our masters taught: "And seventy of the elders of Israel" (Exod. 24:1). Why were the names of the elders not mentioned? So that a man should not query, "Is So-and-so the equal of Moses and Aaron? Is So-and-so the equal of Nadab and Abihu? Is So-and-so the equal of Eldad and Medad?" Scripture also says, "And Samuel said to the people, 'It is the Lord that appointed Moses and Aaron' " (1 Sam. 12:6), and [in the same passage], "And the Lord sent Jerubaal, and Bedan,[8] and Jephthan, and Samuel" (1 Sam. 12:11). Thus Scripture places three less-worthy chiefs on the same level as three of Israel's most estimable leaders, to teach you that in his generation Jerubaal is to be considered as Moses was in his generation; Bedan in his generation is to be considered as Aaron was in his generation; Jephthah in his generation is to be considered as Samuel was in his generation. To teach you also that the least worthy, once appointed leader of a community, is to be esteemed as the most eminent among the eminent. In regard to such deference, Scripture says, "Thou shalt come unto the priests the Levites, and unto the judge that shall be in those days" (Deut. 17:9). Can you imagine a man's going to a judge who is not in his days? But what Scripture means is that you are to be content to go to the judge who is in your days. Scripture says also, "Say not, 'How was it that the former days were better than these?' " (Eccles. 7:10).[9]

15. "And I will make them (va-asimem) heads over you" (Deut. 1:13). Since the word is spelled without the letter yod, it may be read va-ashamam, "their guilt be on your heads." According to R. Joshua ben Levi, Moses said to Israel, "If you will not obey those who are appointed leaders, the sin will be on your heads." The matter may be illustrated by a parable: The serpent's tail said to its head, "How much longer will you move first? I want to go first." The head: "Go!" So the tail went ahead, and when it got to a water hole, it flung the serpent's head into the water; when it encountered fire, it flung the serpent's head into the fire; and when it came to thorns, it flung the serpent's head into their midst. What caused such mishaps to the serpent? Allowing its head to follow its tail. So, too, when the rank and file follow the guidance of their notables, the notables decree in the presence of Him who is everywhere, and He does what they decree; but when the notables allow themselves to follow the rank and file, they inevitably share in the mishaps that follow.

Another explanation: R. Hoshaia said: The matter may be illustrated by the parable of a bride who, while standing unde the bridal canopy, discovers that her hands are soiled. If she wipes them on the wall, the wall will become dirty, yet her hands will not become clean; if on the pavement, the pavement will be blackened, yet her hands will still not be clean. If, however, she wipes them on her hair, her hair [will become more black, and thus] improve in appearance, and her hands will become clean. So, too, when Israel follow their notables but their notables do not attend to Israel's wants, the guilt is on the heads of their notables; but when Israel do not follow their notables, the guilt is on Israel's own heads.[1]

16. R. Akiva said: Israel may be likened to a bird: as the bird cannot fly without wings, so Israel can do nothing without their elders.

R. Yose ben Halafta said: Great is eldership. When elders are aged, they are beloved; when they are young, their youthfulness is regarded as an incidental matter, for we have been taught that R. Simeon ben Yohai said: Not in one instance, nor in two instances, but in many instances do we find the Holy One according honor to elders.[2]

17. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: If young people say to you, "Build the Temple," do not heed them. But if elders say to you, "Destroy the Temple," heed them. For building done by young people may be equivalent to destruction, while the destruction done by old people is equivalent to building. And the proof for this assertion is Rehoboam, the son of Solomon.[3]

18. A prophet and an elder—by what parable may their authority be illustrated? By the one of a king who sends two of his emissaries to a province. Concerning one, he writes, "If he does not show you my seal and my signet, do not believe him"; and of the other, he writes, "Even if he does not show you my seal and my signet, believe him without seal or signet." So, too, of a prophet it is written, "He must give thee a sign or a wonder" (Deut. 13:2), while of elders it is written, "According to the Torah which they shall teach thee" (Deut. 17:11).[4]

19. One verse says to Joshua, "Thou must go with this people [as their equal]" (Deut. 31:7), while another verse says to him, "Thou [as leader] shalt bring the children of Israel" (Deut. 31:23). R. Yohanan explained the apparent inconsistency: In the first verse, Moses told Joshua, "You, on a par with the elders of the generation, are to go in with the people"; while in the second verse, the Holy One said to Joshua, "Take a stick and, if necessary, strike them on their pates. A generation can have but one leader, not two."

Likewise, concerning David, Scripture says, "Then David the king stood up upon his feet and said, 'Hear me, my brethren and my people' " (1 Chron. 28:2). If he called them "my brethren," why "my people"? And if "my people," why "my brethren"? R. Eleazar explained that David said to Israel: If you heed me, you are my brethren; but if not, you are my people, and I shall rule you with a rod.[5]

20. When a good leader is available, the Holy One Himself proclaims his identity, as is said, "The Lord spoke to Moses, saying: "See, I have called by name Bezalel' " (Exod. 31:2).[6]

21. "Through Thee comes kingship, O Lord, and through Thee he who has charge of anything is raised up" (1 Chron. 29:11).[7] Rav said: Even the man in charge of water pits is raised to his office by Heaven.[8]

22. R. Eleazar said: When the Holy One assigns high rank to a man, He assigns it to his children and his children's children unto the end of all generations. But if that man becomes arrogant, the Holy One brings him low.[9]

23. "Whom thou knowest to be the people's elders" (Num. 11:16)—you must know whether they have in fact been approved by the people. The words "the people's elders" suggest that a man should not be considered for office until people sing his praise, saying, "So-and-so is virtuous, pious, and fit to be declared a sage."[10]

24. "Thou shalt not take the Name of the Lord thy God in vain" (Exod. 20:7)—do not rush to accept authority when you are not fit for such authority. R. Jacob, citing R. Mani, supported this interpretation by citing the verse "Go not forth hastily to strive" (Prov. 25:8), where the word for "to strive," le-riv, is written defectively, so that it can also be read le-rav, "for authority."

According to R. Abbahu, God said: I am called holy, and [when you take on authority], you, too, will be called holy. Unless you have all attributes of Mine [which I revealed to Moses (Exod. 34:6–7)], you may not take on such authority.[11]

26. "This is the generation and those who seek its welfare" (Ps. 24:6).[2] R. Judah [II] the Patriarch and the sages differed about this matter. According to one opinion, the character of a generation is determined by its leader. According to the other opinion, the character of its leader is determined by the generation.[3]

27. In the synagogue in Maon,[4] while interpreting in Aramaic the verse, "Hear this, O ye priests" (Hos. 5:1), Yose of Maon said: The Holy One will fetch the priests, have them stand for judgment, and ask them, "Why did you not labor in study of Torah? Did you not enjoy twenty-four gifts[5] as your prerogative?" The priests will reply, "But Israel give us nothing now."[6]

Then Yose went on, " 'Attend, ye House of Israel' [Hos. 5:1]—why, O Israel, did you not give to the priests the twenty-four gifts I commanded you at Sinai to give?" Israel will reply, "But the servants of the patriarch's household take everything."

Then Yose went on, " 'Give ear, O royal house of the patriarch,[7] for unto you will come judgment' [Hos. 5:1]. Is it not to you that I said, 'This then shall be what is adjudged to belong to the priests' [Deut. 18:3]? Therefore at you and against you will judgment be turned when I sit in judgment over the royal patriarch's house to bring their rule to an end and have them perish from the world."

When R. Judah the Patriarch heard what Yose had said, [he was enraged], and Yose, frightened, fled. In the evening, Resh Lakish went in to pay his respects to R. Judah and to pacify him concerning Yose of Maon, saying, "Master, we should be grateful to the nations of the world, who bring mimes into their theaters and circuses to entertain them, and thus induce them to converse amicably among themselves without lapsing into foolish quarrels. [It was in order to wean people from vain pursuits that] Yose of Maon expounded words of Torah, yet you are enraged at him." R. Judah: "But does he know anything at all of Torah?" Resh Lakish: "Yes, he is an eminent scholar." R. Judah: "Will he be able to answer any question I may put to him?" Resh Lakish: "Yes." R. Judah: "If so, let him come to see me." When Yose came in, R. Judah asked him, "What is meant by 'Behold, everyone that useth proverbs shall use this proverb against thee, saying: Like mother, like daughter' (Ezek. 16:44)?" Yose: "Like mother, like daughter—like the generation is its patriarch; like the altar are its priests. As people say in the proverb, 'Like the garden is the gardener.' "

At that, Resh Lakish said to Yose, "Even before I finish pacifying R. Judah for one insult, you hurl another insult at him for us to cope with."[8]

28. Resh Lakish went up to pay his respects to our Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch]. "Pray for me," R. Judah begged him, "for this Roman government is exceedingly evil."[9] "Take nothing from anyone," Resh Lakish told him, "and then you will not have to give anything [to anyone]." While Resh Lakish was sitting with R. Judah, a woman came in, bringing R. Judah a dish with a knife in it. He took the knife and returned the dish to the woman. At that moment an imperial courier came in and saw the knife, took a fancy to it, and carried it off. Toward evening, Resh Lakish went again to pay his respects to our Rabbi and saw him laughing. "Why are you laughing?" asked Resh Lakish. R. Judah: "That knife you saw—an imperial courier came in, saw it, coveted it, and took it away." Resh Lakish: "Did I not tell you that if you take nothing from anyone, you will not have to give anything to anyone?"[10]

29. R. Hanina said: Why is it written, "The Lord will indict the elders of His people and the princes thereof" (Isa. 3:14)? Granted, the princes sinned, but in what way did the elders sin? You must therefore conclude: God will indict the elders because they did not protest against the princes' doings.[11]

30. R. Mana used to ridicule those who were appointed to office through money. R. Ammi applied to them the verse "Gods of silver, or gods of gold, ye shall not make unto you" (Exod. 20:20).

Rav said: One need not stand in the presence of a judge appointed through money, nor need one call him "Master." As for the judicial stole placed upon him, it is worth no more than the packsaddle of a donkey.

While R. Ze'era and one of the sages were sitting together, one of those who were appointed to office through money passed by. The sage said to R. Ze'era: Let us make believe that we are reciting Mishnah, so that we will not have to stand up for him.

Jacob of Kefar Gibborayya interpreted the verse "Woe unto him that saith to the wood: 'Awake,' to the dumb stone: 'Arise!' Can this teach?" (Hab. 2:19)—can such a one teach? "Behold, he is overlaid with gold and silver" (ibid.)—was he not appointed through money? "Within him there is no spirit at all" (ibid.)—he never learned anything at all. If you wish to appoint [one that is fit], "the Lord is in His holy Temple" (Heb. 2:20)—look, R. Isaac son of R. Eleazar is in the synagogue at the gate of Caesarea.[12]

36. "And they spoke unto him, saying: 'If thou wilt be a servant unto this people.' " etc. (1 Kings 12:7). The verse teaches you that he who is appointed over a community becomes the servant of the community.

Rabban Gamaliel made up his mind to place R. Eleazar Hisma and R. Yohanan ben Gudgada in posts of authority. He sent for them, but they did not come. He sent for them again, and they came. He then said to them: You apparently suppose that I am about to bestow rulership upon you. What I am bestowing upon you is servitude, as is said, "And they spoke unto him, saying: 'If thou wilt be this day a servant unto this people.' "[6]

37. A story is told of R. Yohanan ben Nuri and R. Eleazar ben Hisma, whom Rabban Gamaliel placed in authority at the academy. However, the disciples took no cognizance of them, and in the evening the two quietly sat down among the disciples. When Rabban Gamaliel came in and found the two seated among the disciples, he said: R. Yohanan ben Nuri and R. Eleazar ben Hisma, you dealt ill[7] with the academy's community in not exercising authority over it. In the past, you were subject to your own governance. But henceforth [like it or not] you are in servitude to the community.[8]

38. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] came out of the bathhouse, wrapped himself in his garments, and sat down to attend to the needs of the people. Rabbi's servant mixed a cup of water and wine for him, but since Rabbi was so busy attending to people's needs, he could not spare a moment to take it from his servant, who [kept holding it] until he dozed off and fell asleep. When Rabbi finally turned and looked at him, he said, Solomon put it well: "Sweet is the sleep of the laboring man, whether he eat little or much; but the satiety of the rich will not suffer him to sleep" (Eccles. 5:11). Those [rich in Torah] like ourselves are so busy attending to the needs of the people that we are not even allowed to sleep.[9]

39. "And Moses went down from the mount unto the people" (Exod. 19:14). This shows that Moses did not turn to his own affairs, did not even go down to his house, but went directly "from the mount unto the people."[10]

40. Before God confers high office on a man, He first tests him in a little thing, and only then promotes him to high office. Here you have two of the world's great, whom God first tested in a little thing, found trustworthy, and then promoted to high office. He tested David by sheep, which he led far into the wilderness in order to keep them from despoiling [the fields of others]. Eliab referred to this practice when he said to David, "And with whom hast thou left those few sheep [far] in the wilderness?" (1 Sam. 17:28). Then God said to David, "You have been found trustworthy in tending sheep; come now and tend My sheep," as is said, "From following the ewes that give suck, He brought him to be shepherd over Jacob His People" (Ps. 78:71). So, too, Scripture says of Moses, "And he led the flock to the farthest end of the wilderness" (Exod. 3:1), in order to keep them from despoiling [the fields of others]. Therefore God took him to tend Israel, as is said, "Thou didst lead Thy people like a flock, by the hand of Moses and of Aaron" (Ps. 77:21).[11]

41. "The Lord testeth the righteous" (Ps. 11:5). How does He test him? By having him pasture sheep. He tested David by means of a flock and found him a good shepherd, as is said, "God took him because of [his] separations[12] of the sheep" (Ps. 78:70). What is meant by the phrase "his separations"? It means that David kept some sheep separate from others. He would lead out the lambs and let them feed on the upper part of the herbage. He would then lead out the old ewes and let them feed on the middle part of the herbage; and finally he would lead out the rams and let them feed on the stubble of the herbage. Accordingly, the Holy One said: Seeing that David knows how to feed the sheep, each according to its capacity, let him come and feed My sheep, the people of Israel, as is said, "From following the ewes that give suck, He brought him to be shepherd over Jacob His people" (Ps. 78:71).

Moses was also tested by the Holy One by means of the flock, as our masters explained: When Moses our teacher was tending Jethro's flock in the wilderness, a lamb scampered off, and Moses ran after it, until it approached a shelter under a rock. As the lamb reached the shelter, it came upon a pool of water and stopped to drink. When Moses caught up with it, he said, "I did not know that you ran away because you were thirsty. Now you must be tired." So he hoisted the lamb on his shoulders and started walking back with it. The Holy One then said: Because you showed such compassion in tending the flock of a mortal, as you live, you shall become shepherd of Israel, the flock that is Mine.[1]

42. If there were no flock, what need for a shepherd?[2]

43. "Take [the elders of Israel] unto the Tent of Meeting" (Num. 11:16). God said to Moses: Take them by persuasive words. First speak to them words of praise: "Happy are you that you were appointed." Then speak to them words to Israel's discredit: "You are to know that they are litigious and contrary. So you are taking this responsibility upon yourselves with the understanding that they may curse you, may throw stones at you." [To drive the point home, God finished by saying]: What I set forth clearly to you [Moses], you are to set forth clearly to the elders.[3]

44. When R. Yose came to Kufrah, he wanted to appoint leaders over the people, but they refused to accept office. So, quoting to them "Ben Bebai was in charge of the wicks [for the Temple lampstand],"[4] he said: If he who was appointed to have charge of wicks merited being mentioned with the notables of his generation, how much greater by far will be your merit, for you are to have charge of the vital needs of human beings.

When R. Haggai appointed community leaders, he would have them carry a Torah scroll, by way of saying that every sort of authority bestowed is bestowed with Torah's authorization, as Torah said, "By me kings reign, by me rulers rule" (Prov. 8:15–16).

When people wanted to appoint R. Akiva a community leader, he said, "Let me consult my family." The people followed him and [in response to the family's advice that he accept] heard him say, "Even if it means being abused, even if it means being regarded as reprehensible."[5]

45. "Take thee Joshua, the son of Nun, a man in whom is spirit" (Num. 27:18), a man who will have the capacity to stand up to the spirit of each and every one.[6]

46. "And Moses called unto Joshua, and said unto him in the sight of all Israel: 'Be strong and of good courage' " (Deut. 31:7). The people I am turning over to you are still kids of the goats, being very young. Do not be provoked by what they do, even as their Lord was not provoked by what they did, as He said, "Because Israel was young, I loved him" (Hos. 11:1).[7]

47. "My son, if thou art become surety for thy neighbor" (Prov. 6:1). R. Nehemiah said: This verse is addressed to scholars. As long as one is but a scholar [engaged in his studies], he is not responsible for the community and will not be punished [for its lapses], but as soon as he is appointed a leader and dons the stole [of authority], he may no longer say, "I will engage only in what is of benefit to me. I am not responsible for the community." On the contrary, the community's entire burden is henceforth on his shoulders. If he sees a man resorting to violence against another or engaging in a forbidden sexual act and does not endeavor to prevent him, he will be punished because of what that man did, while the holy spirit laments, "My son, if thou art become surety for thy neighbor," you are responsible for him. [Once you assume office], you put yourself in the arena, and he who puts himself in the arena is either conquered or conquers.[8]

48. R. Eleazar said: Any leader who guides a community gently will merit guiding it in the world-to-come.[9]

49. When a leader lords it over a community, the Holy One weeps every day because of him.[10]

50. "Who struck terror in the land of the living" (Ezek. 32:24) refers, said R. Hisda, to a leader who strikes terror in a community not for the sake of Heaven.

R. Judah said in the name of Rav: A leader who strikes terror in a community not for the sake of Heaven will never have a disciple of the wise for a son.[11]

51. "And Samson called unto the Lord, and said: 'O Lord God, remember me, I pray Thee, and strengthen me, I pray Thee, only this once' " (Judg. 16:28). Samson pleaded with the Holy One: Master of the universe, remember on my behalf the twenty-two years I judged Israel and never presumed to say to anyone, "Carry my staff from here to there."[12]

52. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Jehozadak: One should not appoint a leader over a community unless he has a basket of reptiles hanging behind him,[13] so that if he becomes arrogant, people may say to him, "Look behind you."[14]

53. "The heads of your tribes, your elders, and your officers" (Deut. 29:9). Even though I appointed over you heads, elders, and officers, all of you are equal before Me, for the verse concludes, "All are men of Israel" (ibid.).[15]

54. "I went down into the garden of nuts" (Song 6:11). Resh Lakish said: The nut tree is smooth. Anyone who would climb to its top without considering how to do it is sure to fall to his death, thus taking his punishment from the tree. So, too, he who would exercise authority over a community in Israel without considering how to do it is sure to fall and take his punishment from the hands of the community.[1]

55. "When [a son of] Ephraim spoke, making [Solomon] tremble" (Hos. 13:1). When Jeroboam son of Nebat came and spoke reprimands to Solomon, the Holy One said to Jeroboam: Why do you reprimand him? "He is a prince of Israel" (Hos. 13:1). As you live, I will have you taste his authority, and you will be unable to cope with it. We are told that as soon as Jeroboam attained kingship, he "became guilty through Baal and died" (ibid.).[2]

56. R. Judah said: Three things shorten a man's days and years: being given a Torah scroll to read and refusing to read it; being given a cup of blessing to say grace and refusing to say it; and taking on airs of authority.

R. Hama bar Hanina said: Why did Joseph die before his brothers?[3] Because he took on an air of authority.[4]

57. Power buries those who possess it. A man enters the world naked and leaves it naked. Would that on leaving it he were [as free of sin] as on entering it.[5]

58. R. Yohanan said: Woe to authority, for it buries its possessor. There was not a prophet that did not outlive four kings who were his contemporaries.[6]

59. R. Eleazar ben Azariah said, "I am some seventy years old." Though he had attained authority, he nevertheless lived long. Thus you learn that authority generally shortens life.[7]

60. Woe unto authority, for it buries those who possess it. Woe unto [the kind of] authority that does not do good to the world.[8]

61. "Gather unto Me seventy men of the elders of Israel" (Num. 11:16). R. Abba bar Kahana said: After the elders were appointed, all Israel kindled lamps in their honor as they rejoiced over them. When Miriam saw the lamps lit, she asked Zipporah, "What is the meaning of these lamps alight?" After Zipporah explained the matter to Miriam, Miriam said, "[How] happy these men's wives must be at what they see—how their husbands have risen to authority." Zipporah replied, "Alas for these wives."[9]

62. "Joshua . . . said: 'My lord Moses, make them cease' " (Num. 11:28). How? Joshua meant: Throw on them the cares of the community, and they will as a matter of course cease prophesying.[10]

63. He who pursues office, office flees from him; he who flees from it, it pursues him.[11]

64. Shemaiah said: Shun authority.

Just what does this mean? That a man should not on his own place a crown upon his head. But others may do so.[12]

65. We have been taught that R. Joshua ben Perahiah said: Formerly, had a man said to me, "Accept this office," I would have been ready to bind him and place him before a lion. Now, however, were a man to say to me, "Give up this office," I would feel like pouring a kettle of boiling water over him. Note that at first Saul fled from high office, but after he reached it, he sought to slay David.[13]

66. R. Joshua ben Kevusai said: All my days, I fled from office. But now that I have achieved it, were anyone to attempt to oust me, I would go at him with this kettle. Even as a kettle scalds, maims, or blackens, so would I go at him.[14]

67. It is easy to go up to a dais, tough to come down.[15]

68. Our Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] was very modest and used to say, "I am prepared to do anything a person tells me, except what the elders of Betera did for my ancestor [Hillel]—they actually relinquished their high office and promoted him to it. Still, if R. Huna the Exilarch were to come up to the Land, I would rise up out of respect for him [relinquish my office, and] seat him above me, for he is descended from Judah on the male side, while I am descended from Judah only on the female side." But when R. Hiyya the Elder said to him, "Look, R. Huna is outside!" Rabbi's face went pale. When R. Hiyya saw that Rabbi's face had gone pale, he said, "It is R. Huna's coffin that has come."[16]

69. "When a ruler sinneth . . . through error . . . he shall bring his offering" (Lev. 4:22). R. Yohanan ben Zakkai said: Happy is the generation whose ruler brings an offering in expiation of his error. If the ruler must bring an offering, is there any need to add that a commoner must also bring an offering? And if the ruler must bring an offering for an error, is there any need to add that he must do so if he committed a sin wittingly?[17]

70. Happy is the generation in which the greater defer to the lesser and, it goes without saying, the lesser to the greater.[1]

71. "When our rulers are willing to bear burdens, there will be no breach, no sortie, and no outcry in our broad places" (Ps. 144:14). R. Yohanan said: The psalm does not say, "Rulers are burdened," but says, "Our rulers are burdened," meaning that when the great are willing to shoulder the burdens of the lesser, "there will be no breach, no sortie, and no outcry in our broad places." R. Simeon ben Lakish finds in the verse the opposite meaning: The psalm does not say, "Our rulers bear burdens," but says, "Our rulers are borne as burdens," meaning that when the lesser bear the greater as burdens, "there will be no breach, no sortie, and no outcry in our broad places."[2]

72. R. Yohanan said: In saying, "And it came to pass when the generation judged its judges" (Ruth 1:1),[3] Scripture means that the generation had to judge its judges. When a judge would say, "Remove the toothpick from between your teeth," the accused would reply, "Remove the beam from between your eyes." When a judge would say, "Thy silver is become dross" (Isa. 1:22), the accused would reply, "Thy wine is mixed with water" (ibid.).[4]

73. "And it came to pass in the days when the judges were judged" (Ruth 1:1). Woe unto the generation that judges its judges, and woe unto the generation whose judges are in need of being judged.[5]

74. Samuel said: As soon as a man is appointed leader of a community, he becomes rich. First it is written of Saul, "He counted them by means of pebbles" (1 Sam. 11:8), but subsequently it is said, "He counted them by means of sheep" (1 Sam. 15:4).[6]

75. If a prophet wishes to benefit from the hospitality of others, let him do it in the manner of Elisha [who accepted the hospitality of the Shunammite woman]. But if he does not wish to benefit, he may refuse to do so, as did Samuel the Ramathite, of whom it is said, "His return was to Ramah, even though wherever [he judged Israel] . . . was his home" (1 Sam. 7:17), which R. Yohanan took to mean that he provided himself a home of his own at all the places he went in circuit.[7]

76. As Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] lay dying, he said: I require the presence of my eldest son. When R. Gamaliel entered, he entrusted to him the regulations of the patriarchate. "My son," he said, "surround your patriarchate with the best people and discipline the students with severity."[8]

77. R. Huna bar Idi said in the name of Samuel: [In order to maintain the dignity of his position], a man appointed to high office in a community may not do any manual work in the presence of three persons.[9]

78. R. Hanina once visited R. Yudan the Patriarch, who came out to him wearing his linen undershirt. R. Hanina said, "Go back and put on your toga, for it is said, 'Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty' " (Isa. 33:17).

R. Yohanan once visited R. Yudan the Patriarch, who came out to him wearing a plain flaxen garment. R. Yohanan said, "Go back and put on your woolen garment, in keeping with what we are told: "Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty.' "

As R. Yohanan left, he saw [R. Yudan's coadjutor] R. Hanina bar Sisi splitting wood. So he said, "This does not befit your dignity." R. Hanina: "But what am I to do? I have no one to help me." R. Yohanan: "If you could not afford to engage help, you should not have accepted high office."[10]

79. "And the people spoke against God, and against Moses" (Num. 21:5). If they dared speak against God, is it not implied a fortiori that they also spoke against Moses? Yes, but adding "against Moses" is meant to teach that speaking against [Israel's] faithful shepherd is like speaking against Him who commanded and the world came into being.[11]

80. An elder to whom something unseemly has happened should not be reduced in rank, but should be told, "Stay home and enjoy thy glory" (2 Kings 14:10).[12]

The King

81. We have been taught that R. Yose said: Three commandments were given to Israel when they entered the Land: to appoint for themselves a king; to cut off the seed of Amalek; and to build themselves the house chosen [by God]. I would not have known which of them had priority but for Scripture's saying, "The hand upon the throne of the Lord, the Lord will have war with Amalek" (Exod. 17:16), from which you are bound to infer that first they were to appoint a king, for the term "throne" implies the existence of a king, as in the verse "Then Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king" (1 Chron. 29:23). Yet I still would not have known which was to come next: the building of the house chosen by God or cutting off the seed of Amalek. However, from Scripture's saying, "When He giveth you rest from all your enemies . . . then it shall come to pass that the place which the Lord your God shall choose," etc. (Deut. 12:10), you are bound to infer that the cutting off of the seed of Amalek was to come before the building of the Temple. Indeed, the verse "And it came to pass when [David] the king dwelt in his house, and the Lord had given him rest from his enemies round about" (2 Sam. 7:1) is followed at once by "The king said unto Nathan the Prophet: "Here I am dwelling in a house of cedars while the Ark of God abides in a tent" (2 Sam. 7:2).[1]

82. We have been taught that R. Eliezer said: The elders of the generation made a proper request when they said, "Give us a king to judge us" (1 Sam. 8:6). But the ignorant [the amme ha-aretz] in Israel spoiled it by adding, "That we also may be like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles" (1 Sam. 8:20).[2]

83. R. Yose said: A king is allowed to do all that is set forth in chapter 8 [of the book of Samuel] concerning the actions of a king. But R. Judah said: The king's possible actions were set forth in that chapter only to inspire the people with fear, in keeping with "Thou shalt [be free to] set a king upon thee" (Deut. 17:15), that the fear of him shall be upon you. R. Nehorai said: The actions of a king were set forth in that chapter only in anticipation of the people's future complaints, for in declaring, "And shalt say [on thine own]: I will set a king upon me," etc. (Deut. 17:14), [Scripture implies that kingship is a choice, not an obligation].[3]

84. "Thou shalt in any wise set him king upon thee" (Deut. 17:15), that the awe of him shall be upon you. Hence, the sages said: One is not to mount the steed of a king of Israel, nor sit on his throne, nor make use of his crown or his scepter or any of his utensils. When he dies, all these are burned in front of his corpse. Nor is one to gaze upon him when he is naked, when his hair is being sheared, or when he is in the bathhouse, in deference to "Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty" (Isa. 33:17).[4]

85. R. Yannai said: The awe of kingship should always be upon you. Thus Moses said, "And all these thy servants shall come down unto me, and bow down unto me" (Exod. 11:8). Even though he knew that Pharaoh also would come down, he did not, in deference to the king's person, say that Pharaoh would bow down to him. R. Yohanan drew the same inference from "The hand of the Lord was on Elijah, and he girded up his loins, and ran before Ahab" (1 Kings 18:46).[5]

86. It is not proper for a king to do anything himself. He should issue an order and have others do it for him.[6]

87. The king's highway has no limits, for he may breach a wall to make a way for himself and no one may prevent his doing so.[7]

88. Our masters taught: A funeral procession must make way for a bridal procession, and both must make way for a king of Israel.

It was said of King Agrippa that he made way for a bride, and the sages commended him.

You say, "Commended him," implying that he acted properly. But did not R. Ashi say: Even he who maintains that if a patriarch forgoes the honor due him, it is forgone, [admits] that if a king forgoes the honor due him, it is not forgone, because, as a master taught, "Thou shalt in any wise set him king upon thee," implies that the awe of him shall be upon you [always].

It [the incident with the bride] took place at a crossroads.[8]

89. When a king and a bride meet, the bride must make way in deference to the king. Nevertheless, King Agrippa made way for a bride, and the sages commended him. When they asked him, "What made you do so?" he replied, "I wear a crown every day; let her wear her crown for a brief hour."[9]

90. R. Yudan said: He who is insolent toward a king is as though he were insolent toward the Presence.[10]

91. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: The words "Behold, it was . . . good" (Gen. 1:31) apply to the kingdom of Heaven. The full statement "Behold, it was very good" applies to the Roman Empire. But how can the Roman Empire be described as "very good"? What a baffling statement! Well, the empire merits such designation because it exacts justice for human beings.[11]

92. "And Thou makest man as the fishes of the sea" (Hab. 1:14). As among the fishes of the sea, the greater swallow the smaller, so it is with humankind: were it not for fear of government, the stronger would swallow the weaker. This is indeed what we have been taught: R. Hanina, deputy high priest, used to say: Pray for the well-being of the [Roman] government—but for the fear of it, men would swallow one another alive.[12]

all men scribes, they would be unable to set down the full scope of the [Roman] government's concerns. And the proof? The verse, said R. Mesharsheya, "Like the heaven for height, and the earth for depth, so is the heart of kings unfathomable" (Prov. 25:3).[1]

94. "Pharaoh dreamed" (Gen. 41:1). I wonder, do not all human beings dream? Yes, but in saying that the dream was Pharaoh's [a king's], Scripture asserts that the dream was inspired by the King of the entire universe.[2]

95. "They shall suck the abundance of the seas" (Deut. 33:19). Two take in abundance and give in abundance: the sea and the government. As the sea takes in abundance and gives in abundance, so the government takes in abundance and gives in abundance.[3]

96. Our masters taught: On seeing kings of Israel, one is to say, "Blessed be He who gave a portion of His glory to those who fear Him"; on seeing kings of the nations of the world, one is to say, "Blessed be He who has given of His glory to His creatures."

R. Yohanan said: A man should always endeavor to go out to greet kings of Israel, and this applies not only to kings of Israel but to kings of the nations of the world as well, so that if he merits [seeing the Messiah], he will see how much more distinguished kings of Israel will be than kings of the nations of the world.[4]

97. R. Sheshet was blind. Still, on one occasion when all the people went out to welcome the king, R. Sheshet arose and went with them. A certain heretic came across him and said to him, "Whole pitchers go to the river, but cracked ones—whither?" R. Sheshet replied, "Come along, and you will see that I know more than you."

As the first detachment was passing by and a shout arose, the heretic said, "Here comes the king." But R. Sheshet retorted, "Not yet." As the second detachment was passing by and again a shout arose, the heretic said again, "Here comes the king." But R. Sheshet once more retorted, "The king has not yet come." Then the third detachment passed by in perfect silence, R. Sheshet said to the heretic, "Now, for certain, the king is coming." The heretic asked, "How do you know this?" R. Sheshet replied, "Royalty on earth is like royalty in heaven, concerning which it is written, 'Behold, the Lord passed by, and a great and a strong wind rent the mountains and broke in pieces the rocks before the Lord, but the Lord was not in the wind; and after the wind an earthquake, but the Lord was not in the earthquake; and after the earthquake a fire, but the Lord was not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice' " (1 Kings 19:11–12).

When the king came by, R. Sheshet pronounced the appropriate blessing over him. At that, the heretic asked, "How can you pronounce a blessing over one you cannot see?" R. Sheshet fixed his eyes upon him, and the heretic collapsed into a heap of bones.[5]

98. At one time, Diocletian[6] was a swineherd near Tiberias. Whenever he approached the house of study of R. Yudan the Patriarch, the children used to go out and rough him up. By and by, when he became emperor, he took up residence near Panias[7] and sent a letter to Tiberias: I command the notables of the Jews to come and appear before me immediately after the outgoing of the Sabbath. He also commanded his emissary: Be sure to give the letter to the Jews only on Sabbath eve as it begins getting dark.

When R. Samuel bar Nahman went down to bathe, he saw R. Yudan the Patriarch standing in front of the great house of study, his face quite pale. R. Samuel bar Nahman asked him, "Why is your face so pale?" R. Yudan replied, "Such-and-such an order was sent to me by the [Roman] government." R. Samuel bar Nahman: "Come [with me] and bathe, for your Creator will perform miracles for us." When the two entered the bathhouse, a bath sprite came jesting and dancing toward them. R. Yudan the Patriarch wished to scold him, but R. Samuel bar Nahman said, "Master, leave him alone, for sometimes he shows himself just before miracles." Then, to the sprite: "Your master is in distress, yet you stand here jesting and dancing?" The sprite: "Eat and drink and keep the Sabbath with good cheer, for your God will perform miracles for you, and I will set you down before the emperor immediately after the conclusion of the Sabbath."

At the outgoing of the Sabbath, immediately after the service, the sprite took both of them and set them down in front of the gate of Panias. When the emperor was informed, "Lo, they are standing before the gate," he ordered, "Shut the gate." But the sprite took them and set them down upon the walls of the town. When the emperor was informed of it, he exclaimed, "I command that the bathhouse be heated for three days, then have them enter and bathe, and, after that, appear before me." The bathhouse was heated for three days, but the sprite entered it [first] and tempered the heat for them, so that when they entered it, they could bathe. Then they appeared before the emperor, who said to them, "Because [you know that] your God performs miracles for you, you contemn the emperor?" They replied, "Diocletian the Swineherd we do contemn, but to Diocletian the Emperor we willingly submit." "Even so," the emperor replied, "you should not contemn the humblest Roman citizen or the lowest-ranking [Roman] soldier."[8]

100. R. Joseph taught that the verse "Behold, I made thee [Edom] small among the nations" (Obad. 1:2) applies [to Rome], where no dynastic continuity exists, because they do not put the king's son on the throne.[1]

101. "And these are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom" (Gen. 36:31). R. Isaac began his discourse with the verse [in which Tyre is told], "From the oak trees of Bashan they made thine oars" (Ezek. 27:6). The nations of the world are likened to a ship: as a ship is provided with a mast from one place and an anchor from another place, so are the nations of the world provided with [their oarsmen, their kings]: "Samlah from Masrekah . . . Shaul from Rehoboth by the River" (Gen. 36:36–37).[2]

102. "Out of them shall come forth the cornerstone, out of them the stake, out of them the battle bow" (Zech. 10:4). Pause and consider! The nations of the world, when about to set up a king for themselves, used to bring him from all sorts of places and set him over themselves: "And in Edom there reigned . . . one of Dinhabah . . . later one of Bozrah" (Gen. 36:32–33), and likewise all their successors [from a variety of places]. But with Israel, it was not so. Out of their own midst came their notables, out of their own midst their kings, out of their own midst their priests, out of their own midst their prophets, out of their own midst their princes.[3]

103. "One from among thy brethren shalt thou appoint king over thee" (Deut. 17:15); indeed, the appointments you make to every kind of office are to be from among your own brethren.[4]

104. "Saul clad David with his garment" (1 Sam. 17:38), even though it is written of Saul, "From his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people" (1 Sam. 9:2). After Saul clad David with his garment and saw that it fit him, he immediately cast an evil eye on him. Observing [Saul so disturbed that] his face turned white, "David said: 'I cannot walk in your garment, for I am not used to it.' So David took it off" (1 Sam. 17:39). From [this incident] you learn that even a man who is short, once appointed king, grows tall. How does such a thing come about? The instant he is anointed with the anointing oil, he becomes superior to all his brethren.[5]

105. "And he took the crown of Malcam from off his head; and the weight thereof was a talent of gold; . . . and it was put on David's head" (2 Sam. 12:30). But how could David have put it on? R. Judah said in the name of Rav: What the verse means is that the dimensions of the crown fit the dimensions of David's head. R. Yose son of R. Hanina said: There was a lodestone in the crown, which kept it suspended above David's head.[6]

106. "Then they brought out the king's son, and put upon him the nezer and the evidence" (2 Chron. 23:11). Nezer means "crown." "Evidence," said R. Judah in the name of Rav, means that the crown provided evidence that young Joash was of the house of David, for the crown fit him who could claim kingship by virtue of his descent, but it did not fit him who could make no such claim.[7]

107. We have been taught: "And he shall write him the repetition of this law" (Deut. 17:18). The king should write out two copies—one that goes out and comes in with him, and the other that is kept in his archives. The one that goes out and comes in with him [should be written out in small letters so that it is] as small as an amulet, which he should suspend from his arm, in keeping with "I have set the Lord always before me; surely He is at my right hand, I shall not be moved" (Ps. 16:8).[8]

108. At the conclusion of the first day of the Festival of Tabernacles, in the eighth year, at the outgoing of the sabbatical year in a septennate, a wooden dais is erected for the king in the Temple Court, and he sits on it. The sexton of the synagogue takes the Torah scroll and gives it to the head of the synagogue, the head of the synagogue gives it to the deputy high priest, the deputy high priest gives it to the high priest, and the high priest gives it to the king. The king stands up to receive it, but sits down when he is to read it. King Agrippa,[9] however, stood up to receive it and read it standing, for which the sages commended him. When he reached the words "Thou shalt not put a foreigner over thee" (Deut. 17:15), tears flowed from his eyes. So the sages said to him, "Fear not, Agrippa, you are our brother, you are our brother."

It was taught in the name of R. Nathan: Because the sages flattered Agrippa, Israel at that moment incurred the penalty of extermination.[10]

109. One of King Yannai's slaves killed a man. Simeon ben Shetah said to the sages, "Set your eyes [boldly] upon him and let us judge him." So they sent word to King Yannai, "Your slave killed a man." The king sent him to them [to be tried]. But they again sent word to him, "You, too, must come here, for the Torah says, 'If warning has been given to his owner' [Exod. 21:29], meaning that the owner must come and stand by his ox."[11] The king came, was given a seat next to Simeon ben Shetah, and sat down.

Then Simeon ben Shetah said, "Stand up on your feet, King Yannai, and let the witnesses testify against you—you are standing not before us but before Him who spoke and the world came into being, for it is said, 'The two men who have a dispute shall stand before the Lord' " (Deut. 19:17). The king replied, "[I shall do not] what you say, but what [all] your colleagues say." Simeon turned

Then Simeon ben Shetah said to his colleagues, "You appear to be given to deep thought. Let the Master of men's thought come and requite you." At once Gabriel came down and smote them to the ground, so that their souls left them.

At that time, the sages declared: A king is not to sit in judgment, nor is he to be judged; he is not to testify nor to be testified against.[1]

110. "The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord as the watercourses; He turneth it whithersoever He will" (Prov. 21:1). When you place water in a vessel, you may turn it in any direction you wish. So, too, when a mortal rises to kingship, his heart is placed in the hand of the Holy One. If the world merits it, the Holy One turns his heart to beneficent decrees; if the world is guilty, He turns his heart to maleficent decrees. But every decree that issues from a king's mouth issues first from the Holy One's Presence.[2]

The sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: A king's servant is like the king himself.[13]

127. Rabban Gamaliel son of R. Judah the Patriarch said: Be circumspect in your dealings with the ruling power. They bring no man near them save for their own need: they appear to be friends when it is to their gain, but they do not stand with a man in the hour of his distress.[20]

Judgment and Judges

128. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said: The world stands on three things: on truth, on justice, and on peace, as is said, "Execute truth, justice, and peace within your gates" (Zech. 8:16).

These three are interlinked: when justice is done, truth is achieved, and peace is established.[21]

129. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said: Make no mockery of justice, for it is one of the world's three pillars. How so? Because the sages have taught: The world stands on three things: on justice, on truth, and on peace. Take care not to subvert justice, for if you subvert justice, you shake the world, one of whose pillars is justice.[22]

Scripture to say, "Which thou art to teach them." However, as R. Jeremiah (according to some, R. Hiyya bar Abba) explained, Scripture means that the judges' implements are to be set before them.

Before leaving for the court, R. Huna used to say: Bring forth the implements of my trade: my rod, my sandal, my horn, and my lash.[1]

131. R. Hisda and Rabbah bar R. Huna sat in court the entire day and grew faint. So R. Hiyya bar Rav of Difti recited to them, "When the people stood about Moses from the morning till the evening" (Exod. 18:13). Can you possibly suppose that Moses sat in court the entire day? When would his study of Torah have been done? However, even when only on one occasion a judge issues a true verdict in keeping with the facts as he ascertained them, Scripture deems it for him as though he had become the partner of the Holy One in the [six days'] work of creation. This is intimated in "And when the people stood about Moses, [the time they spent in his court was equivalent to] 'the morning till the evening' [of each day of creation]," as suggested by the similarly worded "There was evening and there was morning, the first day" (Gen. 1:5).[2]

132. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: When a judge issues a true verdict in keeping with the facts as he has ascertained them, he causes the Presence to abide in Israel, as is said, "God standeth in the congregation of God, when judgment is determined in awareness of God" (Ps. 82:1).[3] But when a judge does not issue a true verdict in keeping with the facts as he should have ascertained them, he causes the Presence to depart from Israel, as is said, " 'Because of the oppression of the poor, because of the sighing of the needy, now will I arise,' saith the Lord" (Ps. 12:6).[4]

133. What is the proof that when three judges sit in court, the Presence is among them? The verse "He [God] judgeth among the judges" (Ps. 82:1).[5]

134. When a judge issues a true verdict in keeping with the facts, the Holy One, if one dare say such a thing, leaves the heaven of heavens and causes His Presence to be at the judge's side, for Scripture says, "And when the Lord raised them up judges, then the Lord was with the judge" (Judg. 2:18). But when He sees that a judge shows partiality, He, if one dare say such a thing, removes His Presence and goes back to heaven. When the angels ask Him, "Master of the universe, what happened?" He replies, "I saw that the judge was partial, and I have removed Myself from there," as Scripture says, " 'For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise,' saith the Lord" (Ps. 12:6). What does the Holy One do? He draws His sword in front of Him to make it known that there is a Judge above, as it says, "Be ye afraid of the sword; for wrath bringeth the punishments of the sword, that ye may know there is shaddun" (Job 19:29); the last word, though read shaddun, is written she-din, "there is judgment" in the world.[6]

135. "Judges and officers shalt thou appoint" (Deut. 16:18). R. Levi said: By what parable may the command [to appoint officers concerned with justice] be illustrated? By the one of a king who had many sons but loved the youngest more than the others. He also had an orchard which he loved more than anything else he had. So the king said: I will give this orchard, which I love more than anything else I have, to my youngest son, whom I love more than any of my other sons. So, too, the Holy One said: Of all the nations I created, I love only Israel. Of all else I created, I love only justice. So I will give what I love to the nation I love.

The Holy One said to Israel: My children, as you live, I am exalted because of your intense concern for justice: "The Lord of hosts is exalted through justice" (Isa. 5:16).[7]

136. We have been taught that R. Yose ben Elisha said: If you see a generation overcome by many troubles, go forth and investigate the conduct of Israel's judges, for all punishment that comes to the world comes only on account of the conduct of Israel's judges, as is said, "Hear this, I pray you, ye heads of the house of Jacob, and rulers of the House of Israel, that abhor justice. . . . The heads thereof judge for bribes, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money" (Mic. 3:9 and 3:11). Therefore the Holy One will bring three punishments upon them, corresponding to the three sins they commit, as is said, "Assuredly, because of you shall Zion be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps of ruins, and the Temple Mount a shrine in the woods" (Mic. 3:12). And the Holy One will not cause His Presence to rest again upon Israel until the wicked leaders and officers cease out of Israel, for it is said, "And I will turn My hand upon thee, and purge away thy dross as with lye. . . . And I will restore thy judges as at the first, and thy counselors as at the beginning" (Isa. 1:25–26).[8]

137. R. Melai said in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: What is meant by "The Lord hath broken the staff of the wicked, the scepter of the rulers" (Isa. 14:5)? "The Lord hath broken the staff of the wicked" refers to judges who make themselves, as it were, into a staff for their sheriffs.[9] "The scepter of the rulers" refers to the disciples of the wise in families of judges [who cover up the unfitness of their kinsmen]. Mar Zutra said: They are the disciples of the wise who teach ignorant judges [the minimal amount of Torah and proper conduct that the public expects, but the judges remain unfit].[10]

The verse "Do not ascend my altar by stepping [on others]" (Exod. 20:23), which is followed directly by "This applies also to those concerned with decisions about justice" (Exod. 21:1).[1]

139. "So that the judgment is left to God" (Deut. 1:17). According to R. Hama son of R. Hanina, the Holy One said: It is not enough for the wicked that they take money from one and unjustly give it to another, but they put upon Me the task of recompensing the true owner.[2]

140. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: When a judge unjustly takes from one and gives to another, the Holy One will take the judge's life, for it is said, "Rob not the poor because they are poor . . . for the Lord will plead their cause, and will despoil of life those that despoil them" (Prov. 22:22–23).[3]

141. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: A judge should always regard himself as though a sword were hanging over his head[4] and Gehenna gaping beneath him.[5]

142. Whenever Rava was leaving for the court, he would say: Of his own will [a judge] goes to meet death. He makes no provisions for the needs of his household, since he comes home empty-handed. O if only he might return [from court as free of sin] as when he went.[6]

143. It is written, "And I charged your judges at that time" (Deut. 1:16); it is also written, "And I charged you at that time" (Deut. 1:18). R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Simlai: The second verse is an admonition to the community that awe for a judge be upon them; and the first verse is an admonition to a judge that he be patient with the community. To what extent? R. Hanin (according to some, R. Shabbetai) said, "As a nurse carries an infant" (Num. 11:12).[7]

144. "Go to the ant; . . . consider her ways and be wise" (Prov. 6:6). R. Simeon ben Halafta said: Once it happened that an ant dropped a grain of wheat, and though all the other ants came by and sniffed at that grain, not one of them touched it, until the one to whom it belonged came back and took it. Ponder the wisdom an ant has! Ponder the rectitude an ant has! She learned her ways from no other creature. She has no ruler or officer over her, as is said, "Without leaders, officers, or rulers" (Prov. 6:7). Hence, you, for whom I have appointed magistrates and clerks—how much more by far should you be willing to heed them, as enjoined in the verse "Ye shall appoint magistrates and clerks in all your settlements" (Deut. 16:18).[8]

145. "Thou shalt not revile a judge" (Exod. 22:27). Our masters taught: It once happened that a man with a lawsuit came before a judge, who gave the verdict in his favor. When he left the judge's presence, he said, "Judge So-and-so—there is no sage in the world like him! He is an angel!" In the course of time, the man had another lawsuit and came again before the same judge, who this time gave a verdict against him. When he left the judge's presence, he said, "In the entire world, there is no fool like him!" People asked him, "Yesterday an angel, and today a fool?" Hence Scripture admonishes you, "Thou shalt not revile a judge."[9]

146. R. Ishmael son of R. Yose said: He who shuns the office of judge rids himself of enmity, robbery, and false swearing. On the other hand, he who is overly confident in giving a verdict is foolish, wicked, and arrogant.[10]

147. Rav said: To whom does the verse "Many are wounded by the immature, but because of those who hold back, all may be slain" (Prov. 7:26)[11] apply? The words "Many are wounded by the immature" apply to a disciple of the wise who is not mature enough to give decisions, yet gives them; and the words "because of those who hold back, all may be slain" apply to a disciple of the wise who is mature enough to give decisions, but holds back from giving them.[12]

148. "Ye shall not be partial [in appointing men who are to sit] in judgment" (Deut. 1:7) applies to the man charged with appointing judges. He should not say, "So-and-so once lent me money; I will appoint him judge," or "So-and-so commands many languages; I will appoint him judge," with the result that the one appointed will be acquitting the guilty and sentencing the innocent, not because he is wicked, but because he does not know better. Scripture accounts it to him who has appointed such a judge as though he himself had been partial in judgment.[13]

149. Resh Lakish said: He who appoints a judge that is unfit is as though he had planted in Israel a pole sacred to an idol, for it is said, "Judges and officers shalt thou appoint unto thee" (Deut. 16:18), and soon after that, "Thou shalt not plant thee a pole sacred to an idol" (Deut. 16:21). R. Ashi added: And if such an appointment is made where a disciple of the wise is available, it is as

151. R. Yohanan said: Those appointed to the Sanhedrin are to be men of stature, men of wisdom, men of good appearance, men of mature years, men who know witchcraft, and who are conversant with the world's seventy languages, lest the Sanhedrin have need to listen to an interpreter.

R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Only he who is so subtle that he can prove from Scripture that a reptile is clean may be appointed to the Sanhedrin.[3]

152. We have been taught: A man who is old, castrated, or has no children may not be appointed to the Sanhedrin. R. Judah added: Nor one who is cruel.[4]

156. The patriarch's household once appointed a judge who was no scholar. So the sages said to Judah bar Nahmani, Resh Lakish's interpreter: Stand at his side as interpreter. Judah stood at his side and bent down to hear him, but he said nothing. Then Judah bar Nahmani discoursed on the verse "Woe unto him that saith to the wood: 'Awake,' to the dumb stone: 'Arise!' Can this one teach? Behold, he is overlaid with gold and silver, and there is no spirit at all in the midst of him" (Hab. 2:19). The Holy One will call to account those responsible for appointing him, as is said, "The Lord is in His holy Temple; let all the earth keep silence before Him" (Hab. 2:20).[8]

157. R. Ishmael son of R. Yose used to say: Judge not alone, for none may judge alone save One. Do not peremptorily say, "Go by my opinion." When your colleagues in the court are in a majority, they have the right to decide—not you.[9]

158. R. Judah ben Pazzi said: Even the Holy One does not judge alone, for it is said, "All the host of heaven standing by Him on His right hand and on His left" (1 Kings 22:19), some inclining toward the scale of merit, others inclining toward the scale of guilt; and the Holy One engages in give-and-take with them. After the verdict is decided upon, the Holy One enters a place where the host of heaven may not enter and by Himself seals the verdict.[10]

159. R. Joshua ben Levi said: When ten men sit in judgment, the collar of responsibility is on all of them.

When a case was brought before R. Huna, he summoned ten disciples of the wise from the house of study, saying, "So that each of us may carry a chip of the beam."[11]

160. "Hear out your fellow men, and decide justly" (Deut. 1:16). Should the same case come before you once, twice, and a third time, do not say, "This case has already come before me once, twice, and a third time," but be patient. Indeed, this is what the Men of the Great Assembly used to say: "Be patient in judgment."[12]

161. R. Josiah (according to others, R. Nahman bar Isaac) discoursed as follows: What is meant by "O house of David, thus saith the Lord: Execute justice in the morning, and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor" (Jer. 21:12)? Is it only in the morning that one acts as a judge, and the rest of the day there is no judging? Of course not. It means that if a judgment [you are about to give] is as clear to you as the morning light, pronounce it; but if not, do not pronounce it. R. Hiyya bar Abba, citing R. Yohanan, derived it from "Say unto wisdom, 'Thou art my sister' " (Prov. 7:4): if the judgment [you are about to give] is as clear to you as the law that you may not marry your sister, pronounce it; but if not, do not pronounce it.[13]

162. "Bless him who leavens" (Isa. 1:17).[14] Rava said: Blessed be the judge who allows the "leavening" of his judgments.[15]

163. What is the proof that a disciple who sees his master erring in a judgment should not say, "I will wait until he carries it out, then demolish his judgment and set up mine,

164. "Remove the chaff from yourselves, then remove it from others" (Zeph. 2:1).[2] Resh Lakish said: Adorn yourself, and after that, adorn others.

A story. In R. Yannai's field, there was a tree that overhung a public thoroughfare, and another man also had a tree overhanging the same thoroughfare. People passing along the thoroughfare objected to the other man's tree. The man came before R. Yannai, who said to him, "You may leave now, but come back tomorrow." During the night, R. Yannai sent out his workmen and had his own tree cut down. The next day, the man came back, and R. Yannai told him, "Go and cut down your tree." The man objected: "But you also have such a tree." R. Yannai: "Go out and see. If I have cut down mine, you should cut down yours; if not, you need not."

What was R. Yannai's idea at first [when he had his tree], and what was it afterward?

At first, he thought that passersby in the public thoroughfare would be pleased with it, because they could sit in its shade. But when he saw that they objected to it, he sent to have it cut down.[3]

165. "Their mother hath played the harlot, she that conceived them hath acted shamefully" (Hos. 2:7). According to R. Simlai, the Holy One said: Israel's leaders put My own words to shame before the common people. How? A sage in the teacher's chair expounds in public "Thou shalt not lend money on interest," yet he himself lends his money on interest; "Thou shalt not rob," yet he himself robs; "Thou shalt not steal," yet he himself steals.

R. Berekhiah said: There is the story of a man whose cloak was stolen. He went to complain about the matter to a judge, and found the cloak spread over the judge's bed. There is also the story of a woman whose kettle was stolen. When she went to complain about the matter to a judge, she found the kettle set upon the judge's stove.

Such is the import of "Their mother hath played the harlot, she that conceived them hath acted shamefully."[4]

166. A judge who is sued is not worthy of the name "judge."

But if that is so, anyone can come in from the street, file suit, and disqualify him.

No, what the statement means is that a judge who is sued [found guilty], and sentenced to pay money is not worthy of the name "judge."[5]

167. R. Yohanan said: In times past, when a man would go up to Jerusalem to plead a lawsuit, the judge would say, "Split a couple of logs for me," "Fill a couple of casks of water for me," [and so on. While the man was doing such chores], his money ran out, and he would have to leave Jerusalem with a broken spirit. When a widow happened to meet him on the way and asked him, "How did your lawsuit come out?" he would reply, "My money ran out, and I got nowhere at all." The widow would then say, "If this person, who is a man, got nowhere at all with his case, all the more certain will I, who am a widow, get nowhere with mine."

Thus were fulfilled literally the words "The cause of a widow doth not come unto them" (Isa. 1:23).[6]

168. While R. Judah was sitting before Samuel, a woman came before Samuel crying [about a wrong done to her], but he ignored her. When R. Judah asked Samuel, "Does not the master realize that 'whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be answered' (Prov. 21:13)?" Samuel replied, "Sharp-tongued one, [I], your superior, will be punished only with cold water, but your superior's superior will be punished with hot water, for he, Mar Ukba, the president of the court, is sitting [here], and [he, being a descendant of David], is told, 'O house of David . . . execute justice in the morning, and deliver the spoiled from the hand of the oppressor, lest My fury go forth like fire' " (Jer. 21:12).[7]

169. The sword comes to the world on account of delay in justice, on account of subversion of justice, and on account of those who interpret the Torah not in keeping with accepted traditions.[8]

170. When R. Simeon ben Gamaliel and R. Ishmael were brought [before the Roman officials], and it was decreed that they be executed, R. Ishmael wept. R. Simeon said to him, "Avrekh,[9] you are but two steps away from being put in the bosom of the righteous, yet you weep!" R. Ishmael replied, "I weep because we are about to be executed in the same way as murderers and desecrators of the Sabbath." So R. Simeon asked him, "Did someone perhaps come to you for judgment or with a question, and you kept him waiting while you sipped your cup, tied your sandal, or put on your cloak, even though the Torah says, 'If thou afflict in any wise . . . I will kill you with the sword' [Exod. 22:23]—whether the affliction be severe or the affliction be light?"[10]

Taking Bribes and Showing Favor

171. R. Nahman bar Kohen expounded the verse "The king by justice establisheth the land, but he that loveth gifts overthroweth it" (Prov. 29:4). If the judge is like a king, who feels that he has no need for material help, he preserves the land; but if he is like a priest, who goes around threshing floors to collect the gifts due him, he will destroy it.[1]

172. We have been taught: "Thou shalt take no bribe" (Exod. 23:8). What is the purpose of such a statement? If to teach not to acquit the guilty and not to condemn the innocent, it has already been said: "Do not subvert the rights of the needy in their disputes" (Exod. 23:6). The Torah's intention, however, is to say that a bribe is not to be taken even if it be to acquit the innocent and condemn the guilty.

If one takes a fee for acting as judge, his decisions are null and void. What is the proof? R. Judah said in the name of Rav: The verse "Behold, I have taught you statutes and ordinances, even as the Lord your God commanded me" (Deut. 4:5), intimating that just as I [your God] give statutes and ordinances at no fee, so you must give judgments at no fee.

We have been taught: The judge who takes a fee for pronouncing judgment is contemptible, but his decision is valid.

But we have been taught: If one takes a fee for acting as judge, his decisions are null and void. Yes, but one may take a fee as compensation for time taken from engaging in other work. Karna used to take an istira[2] from the party he was going to declare innocent and an istira from the party he was going to declare guilty, and then give his decision.

How could he do so? Have we not been taught: The judge who takes a fee is contemptible?

This applies only to a fee for loss of time from performing nonessential work. But Karna used to take a fee for loss of time from performing essential work, for he was regularly occupied in a wineshop, where he sampled the aroma of wines to determine [whether they could be stored], and for that he would receive a zuz.

When a lawsuit was brought to R. Huna, he used to say to the litigants: Provide me a man who will draw irrigation water in my stead, and I will give you my decision.

Jerusalem's judges of civil law used to receive a fee of ninety-nine maneh from the Temple funds.[3] If the amount proved insufficient, an increase was given them, even if they were unwilling to accept it.[4]

173. Rava said: Why is accepting a bribe prohibited? Because when one accepts a bribe from another, one becomes so well disposed to the other that the other becomes like one's own person, and no man sees his own person in the wrong.[5]

174. What is intimated in shohad, "bribe"? She-hu, "that he [the recipient] becomes" had, "one [with the giver]."[6]

175. R. Abbahu said: Come and see how blind are the eyes of those who accept a bribe. When a man has a pain in his eyes and pays money to a physician, he may be cured or may not be cured. Yet these take the equivalent of a small coin and surely blind their own eyes, as is said, "For a bribe doth blind them that have sight" (Exod. 23:8).[7]

176. "For a bribe doth blind the sages" (Deut. 16:19). Even a great sage who accepts a bribe will not depart from this world without his mind being dulled. "And pervert the words of the righteous" (ibid.). Even a wholly righteous man who accepts a bribe will not depart from this world without his mind being addled.[8]

177. "For a bribe doth blind," etc. (Deut. 16:19). In this connection, the sages said: He who takes money to subvert judgment will not leave this world before the light of his eyes is diminished. R. Nathan said: [He will not leave this world] before one of the following three things happens: his mind becomes so addled in his grasp of Torah that he declares the unclean clean and the clean unclean; he becomes dependent on charity; or his eyesight is diminished.[9]

178. A man once brought to R. Ishmael son of R. Elisha[10] th first of the fleece. R. Ishmael asked him, "Where are you from?" The man: "From such-and-such a place." "But," R. Ishmael asked, "between there and here, was there no priest to whom you might have given the first of the fleece?" The man: "I have a lawsuit, and I thought that while I was at it, I might as well bring the first of the fleece to the master." R. Ishmael refused to accept the first of the fleece from him, saying, "I am now disqualified from trying your lawsuit," and had two disciples of the wise seated to try the man's suit. Even as he was going about arranging the matter, he found himself thinking: If the man wished, he might plead thus; or if he preferred, he might plead otherwise. Then he exclaimed, "May the breath of those who accept bribes be blasted! If I, who did not accept the first of the fleece—and if I had accepted it, would only have taken what was rightfully due me—find myself so concerned about his suit, how much more by far would this be true of those who accept a bribe!"[11]

179. The tenant of R. Ishmael son of R. Yose, who was in the habit of bringing him a basket of fruit every Friday, once brought it to him on a Thursday. R. Ishmael asked him, "Why was the day changed?" The tenant: "I have a lawsuit, and I thought that while I was at it, I might as well bring [the basket of fruit] to the master." Refusing to accept the basket from the tenant, R. Ishmael said, "I am now disqualified as judge in your case," and had two disciples of the wise seated to try the man's suit. Even as

180. R. Eliezer's wife, Imma Shalom, was Rabban Gamaliel's sister. Now, in Rabban Gamaliel's neighborhood there lived a certain [Christian] philosopher who gave it out that, when [acting as judge] he took no bribes. In an attempt to expose his true character, Imma Shalom brought him a golden lamp and then appeared before him in court, saying, "I wish to have a share given me of my [deceased] father's estate." He ordered, "Let them divide it [equally]." Then Rabban Gamaliel spoke up: "In our Scripture it is written, 'Where there is a son, a daughter does not inherit.' " The philosopher: "Ever since the day you were exiled from your Land, the Torah of Moses has been abrogated and another Torah[2] given, in which it is written, 'A son and a daughter inherit equally.' " The next day, Rabban Gamaliel came back and brought him a Lybian ass, whereupon the philosopher said to them, "I read on to the end of the book, where it is written, 'I came not to detract from the Torah of Moses but to add to the Torah of Moses,'[3] and [as you said] in that Torah is written, 'A daughter does not inherit where there is a son.' " At this, Imma Shalom said to the philosopher, "May your light shine forth like a lamp." And Rabban Gamaliel said to him, "But an ass came and knocked over the lamp!"[4]

181. Resh Lakish went to pay his respects to our rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch]. "Pray for me," R. Judah begged him, "for this Roman government is very evil."[5] "Take nothing from anyone," Resh Lakish told him, "and then you will not have to give anything." While Resh Lakish was sitting with R. Judah, a woman came in, bringing R. Judah a dish with a knife in it. He took the knife and returned the dish to the woman. Later, an imperial courier came in and saw the knife, took a fancy to it, and carried it off. Toward evening, Resh Lakish again went to pay his respects to our rabbi and saw him chuckling. "Why are you chuckling?" asked Resh Lakish. R. Judah: "That knife you saw—an imperial courier came in, eyed it, coveted it, and took it away." Resh Lakish: "Did I not tell you that if you take nothing from anyone, you will not have to give anything to anyone?"[6]

182. Our masters taught: "Thou shalt take no bribe" (Exod. 23:8). It goes without saying that a bribe of money is prohibited, but even a bribe of beguiling words is prohibited, for Scripture does not say, "Thou shalt take no gain."[7]

183. What is meant by a bribe of pleasant words? Such a bribe as the one offered to Samuel. He was once crossing a river on a rope bridge when a man came along and offered him his hand [to assist him]. Samuel asked him, "How do you happen to be here?" The man replied, "I have a lawsuit." Samuel: "I am disqualified from acting as judge in your suit."

Amemar was once presiding at a lawsuit. When a bird flew down onto his head and a certain man came up and removed it, Amemar asked him, "How do you happen to be here?" The man replied, "I have a lawsuit." Amemar: "I am now disqualified as judge in your suit."[8]

184. A man once brought a bale of small marsh fish to R. Anan. "What is your business here?" R. Anan asked him. "I have a lawsuit," the man replied. R. Anan did not accept the fish, saying, "I am now disqualified as judge in your suit." "I do not request," the man said to him, "the master's decision [in my lawsuit]; will the master, however, at least accept [the present], so that I may not be prevented from offering my firstfruits. For we have been taught: "And there came a man from Baal-shalishah, and brought the man of God bread of the firstfruits, twenty loaves of barley, and fresh ears of corn in his sack' " (2 Kings 4:42). But was Elisha entitled to eat firstfruits? This, however, was intended to inform you that he who brings a gift to a scholar [is doing as good a deed] as if he had offered firstfruits. ["It was not my intention to accept your gift"], said R. Anan, "but now that you have given me a valid reason, I will accept it from you." He then sent him to R. Nahman with the message "Let the master try [the suit of] this man, for I, Anan, am disqualified as judge for him." Since he has sent me such a message, R. Nahman thought, he must be his relative. An orphans' lawsuit was then in progress before him, and he reflected: An orphans' suit is subject to a positive precept [and should not be postponed]; on the other hand, to show respect to Torah scholars is also a positive precept. But the positive precept of showing respect for Torah must take precedence. So he postponed the orphans' case and brought up that man's suit. When the opponent of the man sent by R. Anan noticed the honor R. Nahman was showing his adversary, he found himself unable to present his evidence.

[Until that happened], Elijah [the prophet] was a frequent visitor to R. Anan, whom he was teaching the tractate Order of Elijah, but as soon as R. Anan acted in the manner described [Elijah] stayed away. R. Anan spent his time fasting and praying for [God's] mercy [until Elijah] came to him again.[9] to find fault in the one he loves nor to find merit in the one he hates.[1]

186. Mar bar R. Ashi said: I am disqualified as judge when a disciple of the wise is involved, for he is as precious to me as my own person, and no man can find fault with his own person.[2]

187. "Ye shall not be afraid of the face of any man" (Deut. 1:17). Resh Lakish said: When two men, one weak [i.e., of little influence], the other strong [i.e., of great influence], come to you in a lawsuit, before you have heard their case or even after you have heard their case, you may—so long as you are still undecided in whose favor judgment is tending—tell them, "I choose not to act as judge in your case," lest the party of great influence be found guilty and use his influence to harass the judge. But after you have heard their case and know in whose favor judgment is tending, you may not withdraw and say, "I choose not to act as judge in your case," because it is written, "Ye shall not be afraid of the face of any man."

R. Joshua ben Korhah said: How do we know that a disciple who is present when his master judges a case and sees a point in favor of the poor party or against the rich party should not remain silent? From the verse "Ye shall not be afraid [lo taguru] of the face of any man," which R. Hanin took to mean, "You shall not hold back [lo teageru] your words because of anyone." Further, witnesses should know against whom [God] they are giving evidence, before whom they are giving evidence, and who will call them to account [in the event of false evidence]. For Scripture says, "Then both the men, between whom the controversy is, shall stand before the Lord" (Deut. 19:17). Judges should also know whom it is they are judging, before whom they are judging, and who will call them to account [if they subvert justice], as is written, "God standeth in the congregation of God, in the midst of judges doth He judge" (Ps. 82:1). And thus it is said of Jehoshaphat, "He said to the judges, Consider what ye do; for ye judge not for man but for the Lord" (2 Chron. 19:6). And lest a judge say, "Why should I go to such trouble?" Scripture reassures him, "He is with you in giving judgment" (ibid.)—a judge is held responsible only for what he can make out with his own eyes.[3]

188. What is the proof that a judge who knows that a plea is false should not say, "Since witnesses testify in support of it, I will give a decision and let the collar of blame hang around the witnesses' necks"? The verse "Keep thee far from a false matter" (Exod. 23:7).[4]

189. Judah ben Tabbai said: Do not [as a judge] play the part of an advocate. While the litigants stand before you, let them be regarded by you as guilty; and when, after submitting to the judgment, they leave your presence, let both be regarded as guiltless.[5]

190. "Ye shall hear the small and the great alike" (Deut. 1:17). Resh Lakish said: Let a lawsuit involving a mere perutah be as important to you as one involving a hundred maneh.[6]

191. "Hear [the pleas] between your brethren, and judge righteously" (Deut. 1:16). R. Hanina said: This verse serves warning on the judge that he should not listen to the pleading of one of the litigants in the absence of the other; and to the litigant that he should not set forth his plea to the judge before his opponent has arrived.[7]

192. Who is a cunning rogue? He, said R. Yohanan, who sets forth his plea to the judge before his opponent has arrived.[8]

193. Our masters taught: "In righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbor" (Lev. 19:15). One litigant should not sit while the other stands; one should not be allowed to say all he needs while the other is told, "Be brief."

Another interpretation: "In righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbor" (Lev. 19:15)—judge your neighbor on the scale of merit.[9]

194. R. Huna's widow had a lawsuit before R. Nahman, who said to himself: What shall I do? If I rise for her, her opponent will feel hindered in his plea. If I do not rise for her, I will be doing wrong, for a scholar's wife should be treated like a scholar. So he said to his attendant, "Go and make a duck fly at me, and [to ward it off] I will have to rise."[10]

195. Rabbah bar R. Huna said: When a disciple of the wise and an ignorant person (am ha-aretz) have a dispute [and come to court], the disciple of the wise should be invited to sit down, and the ignorant person should also be told, "Sit down." But if he remains standing, it does not matter.[11]

196. How do we know that if two litigants come to court, one dressed in rags and the second in a stole worth a hundred maneh, the second should be told, "Dress like your opponent, or see to it that he is dressed like you"? Because Scripture says, "Keep far from a false matter" (Exod. 23:7).[12]

197. If a wicked man and a virtuous one stand before you in a lawsuit, do not say, "Since this man is wicked,

I will turn the judgment against him." For Scripture says, "Thou shalt not pervert the justice due to the needy in his lawsuit" (Exod. 23:6), even if he is needy [not in worldly goods but] in good deeds.[1]

198. Such was the practice of R. Ishmael: When two men, one a heathen and the other an Israelite, appeared before him in a lawsuit, if the heathen wished to be judged according to the law of Israel, R. Ishmael tried the case according to the law of Israel; if he wished to be judged according to the law of the nations of the world, R. Ishmael tried the case according to the law of the nations.[2]

Compromise [Arbitration] and Going Beyond the Letter of the Law

199. We have been taught: "Justice, justice shalt thou follow" (Deut. 16:20) One mention of justice refers to decisions based on strict law [which should be just]; the other, to compromises [which should be just]. How are compromises worked out? Say, two boats sailing in the same direction meet at [a narrow channel of] a river. If both attempt to pass side by side, both will sink; but if one is willing to proceed behind the other, both can sail safely. Likewise, two camels meet as they go up the ascent to Beth-horon. If both attempt to go up at the same time, both will fall [into the valley below]; but if one follows the other, both will go up [safely]. How should a compromise be worked out? If one is laden and the other not laden, the unladen should give way to the laden. If one is near [its destination] and the other not near, the one near its destination should give way to the one not near. If both are [equally] near or equally far [from their destination], a compromise should be made between them, the one [who is to go first] compensating the other [who is asked to give way].[3]

200. R. Eliezer son of R. Yose the Galilean said: It is forbidden to arbitrate [in a dispute before the court], and he who arbitrates commits a sin. The law must prevail, even if it involves cutting through a mountain, for it is said, "Judgment is God's" (Deut. 1:17).[4] Thus, Moses used to say, "Let the law cut through the mountain." Aaron, however, who loved peace and pursued peace, made peace between a man and his fellow [before they came to court], for of Aaron it is said, "The law of truth was in his mouth . . . ; he walked with Me in peace and uprightness" (Mal. 2:6).

R. Joshua ben Korhah said: Settlement by arbitration is a meritorious act, for it is written, "Execute the judgment of truth and of peace in your gates" (Zech. 8:16). But is it not true that where there is [strict] justice, there is no peace, and where there is peace, there is no [strict] justice? However, what is the kind of justice with which peace can abide? You must admit, it is justice through arbitration. Thus, of David we are told, "David executed justice and charity" (2 Sam. 8:15). Is it not true that where there is [strict] justice, there is no charity, and where there is charity, there is no [strict] justice? However, what is the kind of justice with which charity can abide? You must admit, it is justice through arbitration.[5]

201. R. Simeon ben Menasya said: There are times when one should arbitrate and times when one should not arbitrate.

For example, when two men come before you in a lawsuit, and before you have heard their case or even after you have heard their case, if you have not made up your mind which way the judgment is tending, you may suggest to them, "Go out and settle the matter between the two of you." But once you have heard their case and have made up your mind which way the judgment is tending, you are not at liberty to say to them, "Go out and settle the matter between the two of you." For it is written, "If you wish to dispose of a dispute that may rush on like water, do so at the trial's beginning—before the arguments are made patent, you may ask that it cease" (Prov. 17:14).[6] Before the arguments are made patent, you may suggest closing the dispute [through arbitration]. But after the arguments are made patent, you may not suggest that the dispute close thus.[7]

202. R. Joseph taught: In the verse "Thou shalt show them . . . the practice that they are to follow" (Exod. 18:20), "the practice" refers to practice in keeping with the letter of the law, and "that they are to follow" refers to decisions that go beyond the letter of the law.[8]

203. R. Yohanan said: Jerusalem was destroyed only because judges based decisions on the letter of the law and refused to go beyond the letter of the law.[9]

204. Some porters [through carelessness] broke a cask of wine belonging to Rabbah bar Bar Hanah, so he seized their garments. When they went and complained to Rav, he said to Rabbah, "Return their garments." Rabbah: "Is that the law?" Rav: "Yes—'that thou mayest walk in the way of good men' " (Prov. 2:20). So Rabbah returned the garments to the porters, who said to him, "We are poor men, and we worked hard all day. We are hungry and do not have a penny." Rav then said to Rabbah, "Go and pay them their wage." Rabbah: "Is that the law?" Rav: "Yes, 'keep the path of the righteous' " (ibid.).[10]

205. The brother of Mari bar Isaac came to see him from Be Hozae, saying, "Divide our father's estate with me." Mari: "I do not know you." When they came to have the dispute adjudicated by R. Hisda, he said to Mari's brother, "Mari spoke properly to you, for it is written, 'Joseph knew his brethren, but they knew him not' [Gen. 42:8], which implies that he left them when he had no beard and met them again when he had one. Go and bring witnesses that you are his brother." The brother: "I have witnesses, but they are afraid of him, because he is a powerful man." So R. Hisda said to Mari, "You go and bring witnesses that he is not your brother." Mari: "Is this the law? The burden of proof lies rather on the claimant." R. Hisda: "This is the way you and all powerful men like you are to be judged."[1]

206. After considering a dispute, the judge acquits the innocent and condemns the guilty. But on seeing that the guilty one is poor, the judge pays the penalty out of his own purse. "Such a judge practiceth justice and charity" (2 Sam. 8:15)—justice to the one and charity to the other: justice to the innocent by repaying him the money owed him, and charity to the guilty one by paying for him out of his own means.[2]

Courts and Judicial Procedure

207. We have been taught that R. Yose said: Formerly there were not many differences of opinion in Israel in matters of law. There were the Sanhedrin of seventy-one judges sitting in the Chamber of Hewn Stone; two courts of twenty-three judges, one sitting at the entrance to the Temple Mount and the other at the entrance to the [Temple] Court; and other courts of twenty-three sitting in various cities in the Land of Israel. When a man needed to inquire about a particular matter, he made inquiry of the court in his city. If there was no court in his city, he went to the court nearest his city. If its members had a tradition concerning this matter, they stated it to him; if not, the inquirer, together with the most expert judge of that court, went to the court situated at the entrance to the Temple Mount. If its members had a relevant tradition, they stated it to these two; if not, the two, together with the most expert judge of that higher court, went to the court situated at the entrance to the Temple Court, and the sage [who differed from his colleagues] declared, "I have expounded the law thus, and my colleagues have expounded it otherwise; I have taught thus, and my colleagues have taught otherwise." If the members of that highest court had a relevant tradition, they stated it to the three inquirers; if not, the members of the three aforementioned courts proceeded to the great court in the Chamber of Hewn Stone. There the Great Sanhedrin sat from the time the morning offering was brought until the time of the evening offering; on Sabbaths and festivals, the Great Sanhedrin sat in the promenade encompassing the Temple Court. The inquiry was then put before them. If they had a relevant tradition, they stated it; if not, they decided the matter by vote. If they who voted "unclean" were in the majority, the matter was declared unclean; if they who voted "clean" were in the majority, the matter was declared clean. The ruling went forth from there and spread throughout Israel. But when Shammai's and Hillel's disciples, who had not waited sufficiently on their masters, increased in number, there were so many differences of opinion in Israel that the Torah became as two Torahs.

Emissaries were sent from the Chamber of Hewn Stone to all Israel to investigate [candidates for judges]. If a candidate was wise, humble, and sin-fearing, and his conduct as a young man was exemplary, so that he was esteemed by his fellow men, the emissaries appointed him judge in his own city. After being appointed judge in his own city, he might in due course be promoted and might [eventually] be seated in the Chamber of Hewn Stone.[3]

208. Civil actions should be tried by three judges, each litigant choosing one judge and both litigants jointly choosing the third. Such is the opinion of R. Meir. But the sages say: The two judges choose the third.

What procedure is followed in judging? The judges are seated, and the litigants stand before them. The plaintiff is the first to speak. If there are witnesses, they are brought into a chamber and earnestly admonished [to tell the truth]. Then they are taken outside, leaving behind the oldest witness, who is asked, "Tell us, how do you know that the defendant owes money to the plaintiff?" If he answers, "He himself told me that he owes the money," or "So-and-so told me that the defendant owes the money," his testimony is invalid unless he declares, "The defendant admitted to the plaintiff in our presence that he owes him two hundred zuz." Then the second witness is brought in and similarly examined. If their statements tally, the judges debate the case.

R. Nehemiah observed: Such was the practice of the morally fastidious men in Jerusalem: the judges bring in the litigants and hear what they have to say; then they bring in the witnesses and hear what they have to say. After that, the judges order the litigants and witnesses to leave the court while they debate the case. If two judges find the defendant not liable and one judge finds him liable, he is declared not liable; if two find him liable and one not liable, he is declared liable; if one finds him liable and one not liable, while the third judge says, "I do not know," more judges are added.

Once the verdict is arrived at, the litigants are brought back, and the senior judge says, "So-and so, you are not liable," or "So-and-so, you are liable."

And how do we know that a judge may not say on leaving, "I was for acquittal, but my colleagues were for conviction. What could I do, seeing that they were in the majority"? Of such a judge, it is written, "A base fellow giveth away secrets" (Prov. 11:13).[4]

209. Capital cases were tried by twenty-three judges.

The Sanhedrin's seating was in a semicircle, the way people sit halfway around a threshing floor, so that the judges could conveniently see one another. The patriarch [who was the chief judge] sat in the center, and the coadjutors at his right and at his left. Before them stood the two court scribes, one to the right and one to the left, and they wrote down the arguments of those who were for acquittal and the arguments of those who were for conviction. R. Judah said: There were three scribes: one wrote down the arguments of those who were for acquittal; another wrote down the arguments of those who were for conviction; and the third wrote down the substance of the arguments of those who were for acquittal as well as the substance of the arguments of those who were for conviction.

In front of them sat three rows of disciples of the wise, each of whom knew the place where he was to sit [in keeping with his rank].

How were witnesses in capital cases earnestly admonished? In capital cases, they were brought in and admonished this way: Perhaps what you say is but conjecture, or hearsay (and thus secondhand testimony), or something heard from a man you consider trustworthy. Perhaps you do not know that we shall test you by a thoroughgoing inquiry? You should know that capital cases are not like civil cases: in civil cases, the guilty makes restitution and is absolved; but in capital cases, the witness is held responsible for the blood of him [who is wrongfully condemned] and for the blood of his posterity [that should have been born to him] to the world's end of time. Thus we find that after Cain slew his brother, he was told, "The bloods of thy brother cry" (Gen. 4:10). Not "the blood of thy brother" but "the bloods of thy brother"—his blood and the blood of his posterity. That is why man was created alone: to show you that if a man causes a single soul to perish, Scripture imputes it to him as though he had destroyed the entire world; conversely, if a man preserves a single soul, Scripture imputes it to him as though he had preserved the entire world. You might be tempted to say, "Why should we get involved in such a miserable business?" Is it not written of such as you, "He being a witness, whether he hath seen or known, if he do not utter it, then shall he bear his iniquity" (Lev. 5:1)? And should you say, "Why should we be responsible for the blood of this man?"—is it not written of such as you, "When the wicked perish, there is joy" (Prov. 11:10).

The judges used to examine each of the witnesses with seven searching queries: In what septennate of the Jubilee? In what year? In what month? On what day of the month? On what day [in the week]? In what hour? In what place? [They also asked]: Do you know him? Did you warn him?

The judge who crossexamines most thoroughly is most praiseworthy. Ben Zakkai once examined witnesses with regard to stalks of figs. He asked the witnesses, "Were the stalks of the fig tree thin or thick? Were the figs black or white?"

If the testimony of the witnesses tallies, the judges begin to examine the evidence in favor of the accused.

Should one of the disciples say, "I wish to plead for conviction," he is silenced. But if he says, "I wish to plead for acquittal," he is greeted with friendly countenance, brought up to the dais, and seated among the judges, and he does not come down from there the entire day. If there is any substance in what he says, he is listened to. Even if the accused himself says, "I wish to plead for my acquittal," he is listened to, provided there is some substance in what he says.

If at this stage the judges find the accused innocent, he is set free; if not, the continuation of his trail is postponed to the following day, while the judges go about in pairs [discussing the charge], eating little, drinking no wine at all the entire day, and debating the matter through the entire night. Early the next day, the judges come to the court. The judge who favors acquittal says, "I held him innocent [yesterday], and I still hold him innocent"; and the judge who favors conviction says, "I held him guilty [yesterday], and I still hold him guilty." The judge who [the day before] argued for conviction may now argue for acquittal, but the judge who [the day before] argued for acquittal may not retract his previous opinion and argue for conviction. If on that day the judges find the accused innocent, he is set free: if not, the judges proceed to vote. If twelve favor acquittal and eleven favor conviction, he is set free; if twelve favor conviction and eleven favor acquittal, or even if eleven favor acquittal and eleven favor conviction, and one says, "I do not know," or even if twenty-two favor acquittal or favor conviction, and one says, "I do not know," more judges are to be added. Up to what number of judges may be added? They may be added by twos up to seventy-one. If thirty-six then favor acquittal and thirty-five favor conviction, the accused is held innocent; if thirty-six favor conviction and thirty-five favor acquittal, the judges are to debate with one another until one of those who favored conviction comes to agree with the opinion of those who favored acquittal.

If at the end of the trial the sentence [of stoning] has been passed, the condemned is taken out to be stoned. (The place of stoning was outside of the court [far away].) A man is stationed at the entrance to the court with kerchiefs in his hand, and another man is mounted on a horse, some distance away [but near enough] to see him. If one [of the judges] says, "I have something to argue in favor of acquittal," that man waves his kerchiefs, and the man on the horse trots up to stop the one condemned [from continuing on his way to be stoned]. Even if the condemned himself says, "I have something more to argue in favor of my acquittal," he must be brought back, as many as four or five times, provided that there is some substance in what he says. If the judges then find a reason for acquittal, he is set free. If not, he goes forth to be stoned. A herald goes out before him [crying], "So-and-so the son of So-and-so is going forth to be stoned for having committed such-and-such offense, and witnesses against him are So-and-so and So-and-so. If any man knows an argument in favor of acquittal, let him come and state it."

When the condemned is about ten cubits from the place of stoning, he is told, "Make your confession," for the way of all who are to be executed is to make confession, since everyone who makes such confession has a share in the world-to-come. If he does not know how to make confession, he is told, "Say, 'May my death be atonement for all my sins.' "

The condemned is not buried in the burial place of his fathers. Two burial places were prepared by the court, one for those who were stoned or burned, and one for those who were beheaded or strangled.

Once the flesh has decayed, the bones are gathered and buried in their proper place.[1] [After the condemned has been put to death], his kinsmen come and greet the judges and the witnesses, as if to say, "We have nothing in our hearts against you, for you have pronounced a true judgment."[2]

210. Our masters taught: It happened once that a man who was taken to be executed said, "If I am guilty of this sin, may my death not atone for any of my sins; but if I am innocent of this sin, may my death expiate all my sins. [I declare that] the court and all Israel are guiltless, but the witnesses—may they never be forgiven." When the sages heard of the matter, they said: It is impossible to recall him, since the sentence has already been pronounced. Let him be executed, and may the collar [of responsibility] hang on the necks of the witnesses.[3]

211. Our masters taught: What is meant by evidence based on conjecture? When the judge suggests to the witnesses: Perhaps you saw the accused running after another man into a ruin, and you ran after him and found him, sword in hand, with blood dripping from it, while the murdered man was writhing [in agony]. If this is all you saw, you saw nothing [that constitutes evidence].

We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Shetah said: May I never behold consolation if I did not see a man running after another man into a ruin. I ran after him and saw him, sword in hand, with blood dripping from it, and the murdered man writhing. I called to him: You criminal! Who slew this man? It must be either you or I! But what can I do, since your blood [i.e., life] does not rest in my hand, for the Torah says, "At the mouth of two witnesses . . . shall he that is to die be put to death" (Deut. 17:6)? May He who knows men's thoughts exact vengeance from him who slew his fellow man!

It is related that before they moved from the place, a serpent came and bit the murderer, and he died.[4]

212. R. Hiyya bar R. Ashi said in the name of R. Hisda: The man who is led out to be executed is given a grain of frankincense in a goblet of wine, in order to make him numb, in keeping with "Give strong drink unto him that is about to perish, and wine unto the bitter in soul" (Prov. 31:6).

We have been taught that the noblewomen of Jerusalem volunteered to provide the wine.[5]

213. R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah bar Abbahu: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" (Lev. 19:18) implies also: Choose an easy death for him.[6]

214. "His body shall not remain all night upon the tree . . . for he that is hanged is a reproach unto God" (Deut. 21:23). We have been taught that R. Meir said: By what parable may the meaning of the verse be made clear? By the one of twin brothers who lived in a certain city. One was appointed king, and the other took to brigandage. The king commanded that his brother be hanged, and whoever saw the corpse said, "The king is hanged."[7] When that happened, the king commanded that the corpse be taken down.[8]

215. R. Meir said: When a man is in distress, what does the Presence say? "My head weighs Me down, My arm weighs Me down"—if one dare attribute such words to God.[9] Now if He who is everywhere grieves over the blood of the wicked that is shed, how much more and more by far over the blood of the righteous.[10]

216. R. Akiva said: Where is the proof that a Sanhedrin that condemns a person to death is to taste nothing at all that day? The verse "Ye shall eat nothing at [the shedding of] blood" (Lev. 19:26).[11]

217. A Sanhedrin that issues a sentence of execution once in seven years is a murderous tribunal. R. Eleazar ben Azariah said: Once in seventy years. R. Tarfon and R. Akiva said: If we were members of the Sanhedrin, no man would ever be executed. To this, Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel replied: Yes; and they would thus increase shedders of blood in Israel.[12]

218. A sentence postponed overnight is a sentence nullified.[13]

219. No punishment may be imposed unless a warning preceded it.[14]

220. No mercy may be shown in a matter of law.[15]

221. Whoever judges a fool will himself be judged.[16]

dictum "When the court declares a thing ownerless, ownerless it is"? The verse "Whosoever came not within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be forfeited, and himself separated from the congregation of the captivity" (Ezra 10:8). However, R. Eleazar stated that [the deduction is made] from "These are the inheritances, which Eleazar the Priest and Joshua the son of Nun, and the heads of the fathers' houses of the tribes of the children of Israel, distributed for inheritance" (Josh. 19:51). [Since "heads of the tribes" would have been sufficient], what analogy between "heads" and "fathers" is suggested [by what appears to be a gratuitous introduction of the phrase "fathers' houses"]? The suggestion is that even as fathers may distribute whatever they wish as an inheritance to their children, so may the heads [of courts] distribute whatever they wish as an inheritance to the people.[1]

223. No court can annul the ordinances of another court, unless it is superior to it in wisdom and in number.[2]

224. R. Hiyya bar Abba said: He who [without witnesses] pleads against an act of the court[3] [contending that he had already paid] says nothing [that is taken notice of].[4]

225. When a man leaves court deprived of the cloak he stole, he should sing a song of relief as he goes on his way.[5]

226. Simeon ben Shetah said: Interrogate witnesses diligently, but be careful in what you say, lest from your words they learn how to speak falsely.[6]

227. The oath taken by witnesses and the oath imposed by judges may be uttered in any language. How is the witnesses' oath administered? Witnesses are made to swear five times in any language they understand, and if [swearing falsely], they answer [each time], "Amen," they are liable. How is the oath imposed by judges administered? When a man is bound to swear an oath to his fellow man, the court says to the man: Know that the entire world, all of it, was shaken when the Holy One said at Sinai, "Thou shalt not take the Name of the Lord thy God in vain" (Exod. 20:7). For with regard to all transgressions mentioned in Torah, there is the possibility, according to Scripture, of being held "guiltless" (ibid.); but with regard to one who swears a false oath, Scripture states, "He will not be held guiltless" (ibid.).[7]

228. Three the Holy One hates: him who says one thing with his mouth and another in his heart; him who possesses evidence in favor of his neighbor but fails to testify in his behalf; and him who, seeing something improper in his neighbor, acts as the sole witness against him.[8] Such a thing happened when Tobiah sinned, and Zigud came and testified against him before R. Papa, whereupon R. Papa had Zigud flogged. When Zigud protested, "Tobiah sinned, and Zigud gets flogged!" R. Papa replied, "Yes, because it is said, 'One witness shall not rise up against a man' [Deut. 19:15], yet you were the only one testifying against him—all you do is bring ill repute upon him."[9]

229. R. Sheshet said in the name of R. Eleazar ben Azariah: He who speaks slander, who accepts slander, or who gives false testimony against his neighbor deserves to be cast to the dogs.[10]

230. A witness who has testified [in favor of someone] cannot [retract and] testify again [against him].[11]

231. R. Hisda said: Evidence may be remembered for sixty years—longer than that, it may not be remembered.[12]

232. A litigant's admission is worth one hundred witnesses.[13]

233. It is told that, in the days of King Solomon, three men were journeying on the eve of Sabbath, just as the Sabbath day's sanctity set in. So, saying to one another, "Come, let us hide our money in one place," they went and hid their money in a place agreed upon. At midnight, one of the three arose, took the money, and hid it in another place. At the Sabbath's outgoing, when they were ready to continue their journey, they went to the place [where they had hid their money], and, not finding it, one said to the other, "You stole it." The other said to the one, "You stole it. "So they went to try the matter before King Solomon. Now, when they had set forth to him all that happened, he said, "In the morning, there will be judgment" (Jer. 21:12). Then what did he do? He sat down and, with his wisdom and understanding, sought to figure out a response whereby he might catch them through their own words.

When they came back to him, he said to them, "I hear of you that you are masters of Torah and masters of wisdom and law. So I beg permission to consult with you about a suit in law: a certain king sent me a request for advice on something that happened in his realm. A young boy and a young girl who lived in the same courtyard came to long for each other. So the young boy said to the young girl, 'Come, let us make a sworn stipulation between us that whenever anyone wishes to betroth you, you will not respond to him except with my permission.' She so swore to him.

"After a while, the young girl was betrothed, but when the groom came to her, she said to him, 'I will not respond to you until I go to So-and so and ask his permission, since this is what I swore to him.'

"What did she do then? She went to her childhood sweetheart and said to him, 'Take much silver and gold, and release me to him who is to be my husband.' He replied, 'Since you have been faithful to your oath, I release you to him who is to be your husband, and I will take nothing from you.' And to the young man who came with her, he said, 'Rejoice in your lot in peace.'

"So off they went. On their way back, they were attacked by brigands. Among them was an elderly man who seized for himself the young woman, all the silver and gold that she and her betrothed had, and all the ornaments worn by them; further, he wanted to rape her. She said to the elderly brigand, 'I beseech you to wait awhile, until I tell you something that has happened to me.' And she told him the whole story. She added, 'If my betrothed, though in the vigor of youth, overcame his impulse and would not touch me, how much more and more should you who are already on in years [restrain yourself]! Take all the silver and gold that I have, and let me depart in peace, to go with him who is to be my husband.' When the elderly man heard her, he lifted his eyes to heaven and began to reason with himself: I, who am on in years, and day by day drawing nearer to the edge of my grave—shall I now do such a [sinful] thing?

"What did he do? He released her, and she went off with her betrothed. He even returned to her all the ornaments, all the silver and gold that he had taken from them, refusing to touch anything that they had or to benefit at all from anything that was theirs.

"Now, the king has sent a request to me to explicate which of these people is the most praiseworthy. Tell me your judgment."

The first of the three men spoke up and said, "I praise the young woman who stood by her oath." The second spoke up and said, "I praise her betrothed, who conquered his impulse and did not touch her." The third spoke up and said: "I praise the brigand who despoiled them of their possessions and then returned all the possessions he had taken, denying himself the use of them."

Solomon immediately spoke up and said, "If, merely from hearing the story, the third of you, who was not there, thought about the material possessions he had not seen, how much more would he think of them in the present instance!" King Solomon ordered that he be put in fetters and flogged until he confessed in the king's presence and revealed the place where he had hidden the money.

"Then they saw that the wisdom of God was within him to do justice" (1 Kings 3:28).[1]

234. There is the story of Alexander of Macedon coming to pay a visit to a king at the end of the world,[2] who showed him much silver and gold. Alexander said, "I have not come to see your silver and gold—it is your customs and legal practices I have come to observe."

As Alexander and the king were engaged in discourse, two men came before the king for judgment. One said, "My lord king, I bought a ruin from this man, and, while clearing it, I found a treasure; so I said to him, 'Take your treasure. I bought a ruin,—I did not buy a treasure.' " The other replied, "Just as you are afraid of the punishment for robbery, so am I afraid of it. The fact is, I sold you the ruin with everything in it—from the depths of the earth to the heights of heaven."

The king addressed one of them and asked him, "Have you a son?" He replied, "Yes." The king asked the other, "Have you a daughter?" He replied, "Yes." "Go, then," said the king, "wed the one to the other, and let the two make use of the treasure." Alexander showed his amazement at this verdict. The king asked, "Have I not judged well?" Alexander: "Yes, well." The king: "If such a case had come up before you in your country, how would you have handled it?" Alexander replied, "I would have chopped off the head of the one and the head of the other, and the treasure would have gone to the king's house." The king: "Does the sun shine where you dwell?" Alexander: "Yes." "Does rain come down upon you?" Alexander: "Yes." The king: "There are small cattle in your country, are there not?" Alexander: "Yes." The king: "May the breath of life in such a man as you be blasted out! It is only for the sake of the small cattle that the sun still shines for you, that the rain still comes down upon you."[3]

235. When Levi visited a certain place, a man came before him and said: So-and-so kava'ed me. Since Levi did not know what the man meant, he went and inquired at the house of study, where he was told that the man meant, "So-and-so robbed me," as in the verse 'Will a man rob [yikba] God?' " (Mal. 3:8).

Rava of Barnash said to R. Ashi: Had I been there, I would have asked the man, "How did he kava you? Of what did he kava you? Why did he kava you?" And I would have found out the meaning of the word.[4]

236. Hanan the Scoundrel boxed a man on the ear and was brought before R. Huna, who said to Hanan, "Pay the man half a zuz." Hanan had a zuz—a defectively minted one—and he wanted the man to give him back half a zuz in change. Since the man refused to do so, Hanan boxed him on the ear a second time, and let him keep the whole zuz.[5] discourse on this theme with "Good and upright is the Lord, therefore doth He instruct sinners in the way" (Ps. 25:8). If He instructs sinners, how much more so the righteous!

R. Simeon ben Lakish opened his discourse [on this theme] with these [two verses]: "And if a man lie not in wait, but God cause it to come to hand; then I will appoint thee a place whither he may flee" (Exod. 21:13) and "As saith the proverb of the ancients: Out of the wicked cometh forth wickedness; but my hand shall not be upon thee" (1 Sam. 24:14). Of whom does Scripture speak? Of two men, each of whom had slain a person. One had slain unwittingly, and the other with intent, and there were no witnesses against either of the two. So the Holy One has the two men come to the same inn, where the one who has slain with intent sits under a ladder, and the one who has slain unwittingly comes down the ladder, falls on top of the one who has slain with intent, and kills him. Thus, he who has slain with intent is slain, while he who has slain unwittingly goes into banishment [to a city of refuge].[1]

238. "Ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge" (Num. 35:11). Moses asked, "Master of the universe! If a man in the north or in the south unwittingly slays another, how is he to know where the cities of refuge are, so that he may flee there?" God replied, "Thou shalt prepare (takhin) thee the way" (Deut. 19:3), implying: You are to prepare direct (tekhavven) roads, so that a manslayer shall not miss the way and, upon being found by the blood avenger, be killed. Still Moses asked, "But how?" God replied, "Set up posts pointing toward the cities of refuge, and on each post let there be an inscription "Manslayer—to the cities of refuge."[2]

239. We have been taught that R. Eliezer ben Jacob said: The words miklat, miklat [refuge, refuge] were inscribed at crossroads, so that the manslayer might see them and turn in the right direction. "What is the proof?" R. Kahana asked. The verse "Thou shalt prepare thee the way"—prepare suitable directions to the roads.[3]

240. "He showeth sinners the way" (Ps. 25:8). R. Avin said: At every mil along the way there was a station, and at each station there was a figure whose hand pointed toward the cities of refuge.[4]

241. Our masters taught: A private road should be four cubits wide, a public road sixteen cubits, and a road to the cities of refuge thirty-two cubits.[5]

242. "Thou shalt prepare thee the way" (Deut. 19:3). You are to prepare side roads leading into the main roads [to the cities of refuge].[6]

243. We have been taught: Neither small fortified villages nor large cities are to be picked as cities of refuge, but only midsized towns located in the vicinity of water. Where there is no water at hand, it should be brought there [by pipes]. Cities of refuge are to be located only near markets [where sufficient food is available] and only in well-populated areas. If the population diminishes, it is to be increased: if the number of residents in the town has fallen off, priests, Levites, and Israelites should be brought in. No weapons—not even hunters' gear—should be sold there. Such is the opinion of R. Nehemiah, but the sages permit such sales. However, both agree that no traps are to be set, nor are nooses to be knotted in these towns, so that a blood avenger may not be tempted to acquire those weapons while visiting a city of refuge.

R. Isaac asked: What is the proof [for all the foregoing provisions to protect the manslayer]? The verse "That fleeing unto one of these cities he might live" (Deut. 4:42), which means: Provide him with whatever he needs, so that he may remain alive.[7]

244. "He must remain in his city of refuge until the death of the high priest" (Num. 35:28). For that reason, mothers of high priests used to provide food and clothing for manslayers, so that they should not pray for their sons' death.[8]

245. "Ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you, that the manslayer that killeth . . . may flee thither" (Num. 35:11). R. Eliezer ben Jacob said: What does Scripture imply by repeating the word "thither" three times?[9] That there is to be the manslayer's dwelling, there is to be his dying, and there is to be his burial.[10]

For the Public Weal

246. Our masters taught: A man should not clear stones out of his own domain and throw them into the public domain.

There is the story of a man who was clearing stones out of his own domain and throwing them into the public domain. A pious man, seeing him, said to him, "Wretch, why do you remove stones from a domain that is not yours to a domain that is yours?" The man just laughed at him. After a time, that man had to sell his field, and, walking on that very public domain, he stumbled over the stones [he had thrown]. He said, "How well that pious man put it: 'Why do you remove stones from a domain that is not yours to a domain that is yours?' "[11]

247. If a man digs a pit in his private domain and opens it onto a public domain, he is liable [even if someone falls into the part of the opening that is in his private domain].[12]

12. If the pit had its opening only in the private domain, there would have been no liability.

Our masters taught: If a man digs a pit and leaves it open, but then turns its ownership over to the public, he is exempt from liability. Such was the custom of Nehunia, a digger of pits, ditches, and caves. He used to dig them and leave them open, but he turned their ownership over to the public. When the sages heard of his procedure, they said, "This man is fulfilling the Halakhah just mentioned."[1]

248. [Even during the rainy season], if a man pours out water into the public domain and another is injured thereby, he is liable for the other's injury. If a man hides [but not thoroughly] thorns or glass fragments in the public domain, or covers his fence with thorns [which jut out into the public domain], or allows his fence to collapse into the public domain [and does not clear it at once], and others are injured thereby, he is liable for their injury.

Our masters taught: The pious men of old used to bury their thorns and their broken pieces of glass in the middle of their fields at a depth of three handbreadths, so that the plow could not bring them up again.[2] R. Sheshet used to throw them in the fire. Rava threw them into the Tigris.[3]

249. We have been taught that R. Nathan said: Where is the proof that a man should not raise a vicious dog in his house, nor set up a rickety ladder in his house? The verse "Thou bring not blood upon thy house" (Deut. 22:8).[4]

250. Our masters taught: A man should not rear a dog unless he keeps it chained. But he may rear one in a city near the border, chaining it during the day and letting it loose at night.

R. Dostai of Birei expounded: The verse "And when it rested, Moses said: 'Return, O Lord, unto the myriads and thousands of Israel' " (Num. 10:36) implies that the Presence will rest on no fewer than two thousand and two myriads[5] of Israel. Should the number of Israelites happen to be two thousand and two myriads less one, and among them is a pregnant woman capable of completing the minimum number, but a dog barks at her and she miscarries, the dog's owner would turn out to be the one who forces the Presence to remove itself from Israel.[6]

251. A story is told of a [pregnant] woman who went into a house to do some baking, and a dog barked at her. When its master reassured her, "Don't fear the dog—its teeth are gone," she replied, "Keep your favors—throw them to the thorns! The fetus has already been uprooted."[7]

252. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: When a city has [steep] grades up and down, men and cattle in it are old by the time they reach half their life span.[8]

253. On the fifteenth of the month of Adar, officials must go forth to clear the roads of thorns, to mend plazas and streets, to measure the dimensions of ritual baths, and to attend to other public needs.

And what is the proof that if the officials fail to go forth and attend to all these things, any blood [shed as a result of their neglect] is regarded by Scripture as though the officials themselves had shed it? The verse "And so blood be upon thee" (Deut. 19:10).[9]

254. "To him that setteth right the way will I show the salvation of God" (Ps. 50:23) applies to people who light lamps in order to provide light for the public. For R. Simeon ben Lakish said: Saul merited kingship only because his grandfather had lit lamps for the public.[10] It is said there were dark alleys between his own house and the house of study, and he used to light lamps in them to give light to the public.[11]

255. On one occasion, when R. Judah, R. Yose, and R. Simeon ben Yohai were seated in teachers' chairs, R. Judah commenced the discussion by observing, "How noble are the works of this Roman nation! They laid out streets, they built bridges, they erected baths." R. Yose remained silent, but R. Simeon ben Yohai spoke up and said, "All that they have done, they did for themselves: they laid out streets to settle harlots in them; baths, to pamper themselves; bridges, to levy tolls."[12]

256. Fruits and items such as wines, oils, and various kinds of flour, which are necessary to sustain life, may not be hoarded; but one may hoard spices, cumin, and pepper. These restrictions apply only to what one buys in the markets; one may hoard what is grown in one's own field or vineyard. In the Land of Israel, one may store fruits for the following three years: the year preceding the sabbatical year, the sabbatical year, and the year following the sabbatical year.[13] In years of scarcity, one may not hoard even one kav of carobs,[14] because such hoarding will result in privation for Israel.[15]

In the Land of Israel, one may not profit from things that are life's necessities, such as wines, oils, and various kinds of flour.[16]

257. Our masters taught: One is not permitted to export from the Land of Israel items such as wines, oils, and various kinds of flour, which are life's necessities. R. Judah ben Betera allows the export of wine, since lack of it reduces frivolity.[1]

258. One should not raise small cattle in the Land of Israel. They may, however, be raised in Syria or in the desert regions of the Land of Israel. One should not breed poultry in Jerusalem on account of the holy offerings,[2] nor may priests do so throughout the entire Land of Israel, on account of their food, which has to be ritually clean. One may not raise pigs in any place whatsoever. No man should raise a dog unless he keeps it chained. One may not spread nets to snare doves unless these are a distance of thirty ris[3] from inhabited areas.[4]

Even though the sage said, "One may not raise small cattle," one may nevertheless rear large cattle, for no restriction is imposed on a community unless a majority of the community can abide it: small cattle can be imported from outside the Land; large cattle cannot be imported from outside the Land.[5]

259. Just as the sages said, "One may not raise small cattle," so they also said, "One may not raise small wild beasts." However, R. Ishmael said: One may raise village dogs,[6] cats, monkeys, and porcupines, as these help rid the house [of rodents].[7]

260. Our masters taught: There was once a certain pious man who coughed [blood] from his heart, and the physicians who were consulted said that there was no remedy for him unless he sucked warm milk every morning. So a she-goat was brought to him and fastened to the legs of his bed, and every morning he sucked milk directly from its udder. After some days, his colleagues came to visit him, but when they saw the goat fastened to the legs of his bed, they drew back, saying, "An armed robber[8] is in the house of this man—how can we come visit him?" Nevertheless, they sat down and, after inquiring into his conduct, found no fault in him except the sin of keeping the she-goat. At the time of his death, he too proclaimed, "I know that no sin can be imputed to me except that of the she-goat, when I contravened the opinion of my colleagues."[9]

261. We have been taught that a disciple of the wise may not live in a city that does not have the following ten institutions and officials: a court that imposes floggings and fines, a charity fund collected by two officials and distributed by three, a synagogue, a [public] bathhouse, a [public] privy, a physician, a cupper, a scribe, [a ritual slaughterer], and a teacher of young children. The sages said in the name of R. Akiva: Also several kinds of fruit trees, because their fruit gives light to the eyes.[10]

262. R. Huna said: A disciple of the wise may not live in a city that has no vegetable garden.[11]

263. "Come, my Beloved, and let us go out into the field" (Song 7:12). The congregation of Israel pleaded with the Holy One: Do not judge me as You judge dwellers in big cities, among whom there exist robbery, unchastity, meaningless oaths, and false oaths.[12]

264. R. Yose son of R. Hanina said: Where is the proof that dwelling in big cities is hard? The verse "The people blessed all the men that willingly offered themselves to dwell in Jerusalem" (Neh. 11:2).[13]

265. The sages said in the name of Rav: A man should always see to it that he dwells in a city whose settlement is recent, for inasmuch as its settlement is recent, its iniquities are few, as Lot said, "Behold now, this city is recent, so one should flee there: [its iniquities are] few" (Gen. 19:20).[14] Because its settlement is recent, its iniquities are few.[15]

Widespread Trouble and the Community's Fast

266. Our masters taught: When Israel are in distress, and one of their number separates himself from them, the two ministering angels who accompany every individual come and place their hands on his head and say, "So-and-so here, who separated himself from the community, will not behold the comforting of the community."

We have also been taught: When the community is in distress, let no man say, "I will go to my house, eat and drink, and live it up." But if a man does so nevertheless, Scripture says of him, "And behold joy and gladness, slaying oxen and killing sheep, eating flesh and drinking wine—'Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we shall die' " (Isa. 22:13). What follows this verse? "And the Lord of hosts revealed Himself in mine ears: Surely this iniquity shall not be expiated by you till ye die" (Isa. 22:14). This is the conduct of the ordinary man [who is afraid of death]. But what does Scripture say of the conduct of a wicked man? "Come ye [says he], I will fetch wine, and we will fill ourselves with strong drink; and tomorrow shall be as this day" (Isa. 56:12). What follows this verse? "The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart . . . that the righteous is taken away because of the wickedness of such as he" (Isa. 57:1). Therefore, a man should share in the distress of the community. Thus we find that Moses our teacher shared in the distress of the community, as is said, "But Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon" (Exod. 17:12). But did not Moses have at least one bolster or cushion to sit on? However, Moses said to himself: Since Israel are in distress, I, too, will share their distress with them. For he who shares in the distress of the community will deserve to behold the community's comforting. Should a man say, "Who is going to testify against me?"—the very stones of his house and the beams on his roof will testify against him, as is written, "For the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it" (Hab. 2:11).[1]

267. "Miriam died there. . . . And there was no water for the congregation, and they assembled themselves together against Moses and against Aaron" (Num. 20:1–2). When Miriam died, and Moses and Aaron were occupied with her [funeral], Israel were seeking water, which they could not find. So they gathered together against Moses and Aaron. When the two saw them coming, Moses said to Aaron, "Can you tell me what this assembly means?" Aaron replied, "Are they not children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, themselves bestowers of loving-kindness, and children of bestowers of loving-kindness?" Moses said, "You do not know how to distinguish between one assembly and another. This is not an assembly bent on doing what is right, but one bent on destruction. Had it been an assembly bent on doing what is right, officers of thousands and officers of hundreds would have been at its head. Yet you say they are come to bestow loving-kindness!"

At once the assembly spoke contentiously against Moses, as is said, "The people strove with Moses" (Num. 20:3). When Moses and Aaron saw their angry faces, they fled to the Tent of Meeting. By what parable may their flight be illustrated? By the one of a notable who fled to the royal palace when the people of his province were stirred up. "And the glory of the Lord appeared unto them" (Num. 20:6).[2] The Holy One said to the servants of the community, "Leave this place quickly. My children are near death with thirst, and you sit here mourning for that old woman [Miriam]."[3]

268. R. Yohanan said: There are three things the Holy One Himself proclaims, namely, famine, plenty, and a good leader. Famine, for it is said, "The Lord hath called for a famine" (2 Kings 8:1); plenty, for it is said, "I will call for the corn, and will increase it" (Ezek. 36:29); and a good leader, for it is said, "See, I have called by name Bezalel, the son of Uri" (Exod. 31:2).[4]

269. The alarm should be sounded on account of any visitation that may come upon a community.

If rain has not come down upon a city, or if there is an epidemic in it, or if its houses are collapsing, that city should fast and sound the alarm, while the people in surrounding towns should fast but not sound the alarm. R. Akiva said: They should only sound the alarm; they need not fast.

On the following occasions, the alarm should be sounded everywhere: on account of a plague of blight, mildew, locust, hoppers, wild beasts, and the enemy's sword, because each is a moving plague. Regarding any other visitations that may suddenly come upon a community, such as epidemic eruptions in the skin, grasshoppers, flies, hornets, mosquitoes, and bands of serpents and scorpions, no alarm is sounded [in public services], but a cry is raised [by private recitation of prayers]. R. Akiva said: For blight and mildew, the alarm must be sounded in whatever measure they appear. For locusts and hoppers, the alarm must be sounded at once, even if only one of these winged creatures appears anywhere in the Land of Israel.

The story is told of certain elders who traveled from Jerusalem to their own cities and decreed a fast, because in Ashkelon there was seen a blight which injured just enough grain to bake one ovenful [of bread]. They also decreed a fast because wolves had devoured two children on the other side of the Jordan. R. Yose said: The fast was decreed not because the wolves had devoured children, but merely because wolves had been seen.

For the following, the alarm should be sounded even on the Sabbath: for a city surrounded by heathens or threatened by a flooding river, or for a ship about to founder in the sea. R. Yose said: It is to be sounded to secure people's help, but not by way of crying [to God]. Simeon the Temanite said: The alarm may also be sounded for an epidemic. But the other sages did not agree with him.[5]

270. What is the order [of service during the last seven] days of fasting?[6] The Ark is taken out to the broad place of the town, and wood ashes are placed on it, on the head of the patriarch, and on the head of the president of the Sanhedrin. Everyone else present takes some ashes and puts them on his own head. The eldest among them admonishes them with these words: Our brethren, Scripture does not say of the people of Nineveh, "God saw their sackcloth and their fasting," but "God saw their works, in that they turned from their evil way" (Jon. 3:10); and elsewhere in an utterance received from God, it is said, "Rend your heart and not your garments" (Joel 2:13). Let no man feel too ashamed to confess before his fellow, too ashamed to make amends for his wrongdoing. It is better to feel shame before his fellow and for his wrongdoing than to have himself and his children distressed by famine. If a man is holding an [unclean] reptile [wrongdoing] in his hand, even if he immerses himself in the water of Siloam—indeed, in all the water of creation—he will never become clean. But once he flings the reptile from his hand, an immersion in a mere forty seah of water will be effective in cleansing him.

Our masters, as mentioned earlier, taught: The eldest among them addresses them with words of admonition. If an elder is present, he is the one who addresses them; if not, a sage addresses them; and if not, a man of imposing presence addresses them, as follows: "Our brethren, neither sackcloth nor fasting is of any effect, but only penitence and good deeds, for we find that Scripture does not say of the men of Nineveh, 'And God saw their sackcloth and their fasting,' but, 'God saw their works, in that they turned from their evil way' " (Jon. 3:10).

"But let them be covered with sackcloth, both man and beast" (Jon. 3:8). What did they do with the beasts? They penned the dams separately, and their sucklings separately, and said, "Master of the universe, if You show no mercy to us, we will show no mercy to these."

"And let them cry unto God by speaking of His might" (Jon. 3:8). What did they say? They said, "Master of the universe, if one can be humbled, and the other cannot [i.e., One is mighty, and the other is not], if One is [invariably] righteous and the other is [not infrequently] wicked, which of the two should yield?"

"Let them turn, everyone, from his evil way and from the violence that is in their hands" (Jon. 3:8). What is the meaning of "from the violence that is in their hands"? Samuel said: If one had stolen a joist, even though he had used it in building a fort, he should raze the entire fort and restore the joist to its owner.

When they stand up to pray, they send to the Ark [as reader] an old and experienced man, who has children and whose home is empty [of possessions], so that his heart may be wholly given to prayer.

Our masters taught: When they stand up to pray, even if there is present among them an elder or a sage, they should place before the Ark [as reader] only a man conversant with the prayers. R. Judah said: They should place before the Ark a man who has a large family and no means of support; who draws his subsistence from [the produce of] his field,[1] but whose house is empty; whose youth was unblemished; who is modest and well liked by the people; who is skilled in chanting, has a sweet voice, and is well versed in the Five Books, the Prophets, and the Writings, in Midrash of Halakhot and Haggadot, and in all the blessings.[2]

271. R. Eliezer said: Fasting is greater than charity. The reason? It is done with one's body, while the other is done with one's money.[3]

272. When R. Sheshet was fasting, he would, after finishing his Tefillah, add: Master of universes, it is manifest to You that while the Temple was standing, if a man sinned, he presented an offering, and though all that was offered was its fat and its blood, atonement for him was brought about. Now that I have been fasting, my own fat and my own blood have been diminished. May it be Your will that my diminished fat and blood be deemed as though I had presented them on the altar as an offering before You, entreating that You favor me.[4]

273. Rava would not decree a fast on a cloudy day, because of the verse "Thou didst cover Thyself with a cloud so that no prayer can pass through" (Lam. 3:44).[5]

274. Our masters taught: Once it happened that most of [the month of] Adar passed by, and rain did not come down. So the people sent word to Honi the Circle Maker: "Pray for rain to fall." He replied, "Go out and bring in the ovens [in which you roast] the paschal lambs, so that they do not disintegrate."[6] He then prayed, but no rain came down. What did he do? He drew a circle and stationed himself within it, as the prophet Habakkuk had done—Habakkuk, who is quoted as having said, "I will stand upon my watch, and station me within a circle" (Hab. 2:1). Then Honi exclaimed before the Holy One, "Master of the universe, Your children have turned to me because they regard me as a member of Your household. By Your great Name I swear that I will not move from here until You have mercy on Your children." At once rain began to fall drop by drop. His disciples said, "Master, only because of your merit have we been allowed to see you [cause such a miracle] without being struck dead. But it seems to us that the rain is coming down merely to release you from your vow." In reply, he exclaimed, "Not for this [gentle] rain did I pray, but for pouring rain that would fill cisterns, ditches, and caves." The rain immediately began to come down so furiously that each drop was the size of the mouth of a cask, and the sages estimated that no drop was less than a log[7] in bulk. Again the disciples said, "Master, only because of your merit have we been allowed to see you without being struck dead. But it seems to us that the pouring rain is coming down to destroy the world."

Again Honi exclaimed before God, It is not for this that I prayed, but for rains of benevolence, benediction, and grace." At once the rain moderated to a normal pace but continued so steadily that all the people had to go up to the Temple Mount [to escape the rising water]. Then they said to Honi, "Master, just as you have prayed for rain to come down, pray now for it to cease." He replied, "I have it by tradition that one may not pray for the cessation of superabundant good. Nevertheless, bring me a bullock for a thank offering." They brought him the bullock. He laid both his hands upon it and said to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, Your people Israel, whom You have brought out of Egypt, cannot endure either superabundant good or superabundant punishment. When You are angry with them, they cannot endure it; and when You shower superabundant good upon them, they cannot endure it. May it be Your will that the rains cease and there be relief in the world." Immediately a wind blew, the clouds dispersed, and the sun shone. The people went out into the fields and began to gather mushrooms and truffles.

Simeon ben Shetah sent word to Honi: "Were you not Honi, I would place you under a ban.[1] But what can I do to you, seeing that you ingratiate yourself with Him who is everywhere, who then grants you your wish, just like a son ingratiating himself with his father, who then grants him his wish? Thus the son my say, 'Father, take me to where I may bathe in warm water,' and he takes him there; 'to where I may shower in cold water,' and he takes him there; 'Give me walnuts, almonds, peaches, and pomegranates,' and he gives them to him. Of you [Honi], Scripture says, 'Thy-Father-and-thy-Mother [God] is glad, so she [the congregation of Israel] that bore thee must rejoice' " (Prov. 23:25).

Our masters taught: They who sat in the Chamber of Hewn Stone [the Sanhedrin] sent the following missive to Honi the Circle Maker: "Thou decreest a thing, and because of thee it is established" (Job 22:28ff.)—[on the earth] below you decree, and [in heaven] above the Holy One fulfills your word. "And light shines upon thy ways" (ibid.)—with your prayer you give light to a generation in darkness. "When they were cast down, thou saidst: 'There is lifting up' " (ibid.)—with your prayer you lifted the spirit of a generation that was cast down. "The lowly person thou savest" (ibid.)—with your prayer you saved a generation whom [sin] brought low. "Thou didst deliver him that is not innocent" (ibid.)—with your prayer you delivered a generation that is not innocent. "Yea, it was delivered through the cleanness of thy hands" (ibid.)—you, through the deeds of your clean hands, have delivered it.[2]

275. Hanan ha-Nehba ["the timid soul"] was a son of the daughter of Honi the Circle Maker. When the world was in need of rain, the sages would send schoolchildren to him. They would take hold of the hem of his garment and say to him, "Papa, papa, give us rain." Then he would plead with the Holy One, "Master of the universe, do it for the sake of these [little ones] who do not know the difference between the Father who can give rain and a papa who cannot."[3]

276. Our masters taught: It once happened that when all Israel came up to Jerusalem for a festival, there was no water to drink. So Nakdimon ben Gorion went to the [Roman] commander and said to him, "Lend me the water of twelve wells for those who have come up for the pilgrimage, and I will repay you with the water of twelve wells; if I cannot do so, I will pay you instead twelve talents of silver." And he fixed the day [for repayment]. When the time [for repayment] arrived and no rain had yet come down, the commander sent word in the morning to Nakdimon: "Deliver to me either the water or the money you owe me." Nakdimon replied, "I have still time; the entire day is as yet before me." At noon, the commander again sent word: "Deliver either the water or the money you owe me." Nakdimon replied, "Some hours are still left in the day." In the afternoon, the commander [again sent] word: "Deliver either the water or the money you owe me." Nakdimon replied, "A little while is still left in the day." Scorning Nakdimon's reply, the commander said to himself: No rain came down the entire year; is rain going to come down now? [With great glee, the commander set off for the bathhouse. At the same time] Nakdimon, greatly depressed, entered the Temple, wrapped himself in his prayer shawl, and stood in prayer to the Holy One, saying, "Master of the universe, to You it is clear and manifest that I made this commitment not for my own glory or for the glory of my father's house—I made it for Your glory, so that water might be made available for the pilgrims." Immediately the sky became covered with clouds, and so much rain came down that the commander's twelve wells were filled with water and even overflowed. As the commander was coming out of the baths, Nakdimon ben Gorion came out of the Temple, and the two met. Nakdimon said to the commander, "Pay me the money for the additional water you have received." The commander replied, "I know that it is only for your sake that the Holy One has shaken His world, but I still have a legitimate argument against you, for the sun had already set. Consequently, when the rains came down, they came down as my property." At this, Nakdimon ben Gorion again entered the Temple, wrapped himself in his prayer shawl, stood in prayer, and said to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, make it known that You have beloved ones in Your world." Immediately a wind began to blow, the clouds were dispersed, and the sun shone out again [showing that the day had not yet ended]. Then the commander said to Nakdimon, "Had not the sun broken through[4] [again], I would still have had a legitimate argument to exact from you the money that was due me."[5]

277. Once Samuel the Little ordained a fast [for the following day], but rain fell before sunrise [before the people had begun to fast and pray]. The people thought that it was due to the merit of the congregation,[6] but Samuel said to them: To make you understand what happened, let me tell you the parable. A servant asked his master for an extra ration of bread, and the master said to his other servants, "Give it to him, just so I don't have to listen to his whining."

Another time, Samuel the Little ordained a fast [for the following day], and the rain fell the next day after sunset [after the people had fasted and entreated God]. The people thought that it was due to the merit of the congregation. But Samuel said to them: No; rain came not because of the congregation's merit. To make you understand what happened, let me tell you the parable. A servant asked his master for an extra ration of bread, and the master said to his other servants, "Keep him waiting until he is weakened by hunger and wracked by pain. Then give it to him."

So how, according to Samuel the Little, is one ever to determine whether a congregation's own merit is responsible for the coming down of rain? Only when a congregation recites [the prayer], "He who causeth the wind to blow," and the wind begins to blow at once; and when it recites, "He who causeth the rain to fall," and rain begins to fall at once.[1]

278. We have been taught: No more than thirteen [consecutive] fasts may be decreed for a community, since it is not right to put too great a burden on a community.

Our masters taught: Once it happened that R. Eliezer decreed thirteen fasts for a community, and no rain came. Finally, when people began to leave [the synagogue], he said, "Have you got graves ready for yourselves?" At this, the people broke into sobbing, and rain began to fall.[2]

279. In the days of R. Tanhuma, Israel had need of rain, so they came to him and said, "Master, decree a fast." He proclaimed a fast for one day, for a second day, and for a third day, yet no rain came down. Then he entered [the synagogue] and preached to them, saying, "My children, be filled with compassion for one another, and the Holy One will be filled with compassion for you." Consequently, as they were distributing charity to the poor, they saw a man conversing with his divorced wife and even giving her money. At that, they went to R. Tanhuma and cried out, "While we sit here, something reprehensible is taking place out there!" R. Tanhuma: "What have you seen?" "We saw So-and-so conversing with his divorced wife, and he even gave her money." He sent for the couple, who were brought before the community, and he asked the man, "What is this woman to you?" The man: "She is my divorced wife." R. Tanhuma: "Why did you give her money?" The man: "Master, I saw her in great distress and was filled with compassion for her." At this, R. Tanhuma turned his face to Him above and exclaimed, "Master of all universes! When this man—upon whom this woman has no claim for maintenance—saw her in distress, he was filled with compassion for her. Now, since it is written of You that You are gracious and compassionate, and since we are children of Your beloved ones, children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and so have a claim upon You for our maintenance, surely, surely You should be filled with compassion for us!" Immediately rain began to come down, and the world enjoyed relief.[3]

280. R. Hama ben Hanina decreed a fast, but no rain came. He was asked, "Why is it that when R. Joshua ben Levi decrees a fast, rain does come?" He replied, "I am merely I, while he is the son of Levi."[4] So the people said to R. Hama ben Hanina, "Come, let us prepare our hearts for prayer. Perhaps the community will turn contrite in their hearts, and rain will come down." All besought God's mercy, and still no rain came. R. Hama ben Hanina then asked the people, "Are you united in praying that rain come down for us?" The people: "Yes." So he said, "Sky, O sky, cover your visage [with clouds]." But the sky did not cover itself. Then he said, "How impudent is the sky's visage!" At that, it covered itself with clouds, and rain began to fall.[5]

281. Levi decreed a fast and implored God's mercy, but no rain came down. So he said to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, You have gone up and taken Your seat in heaven, and have no compassion for Your children." Rain did fall, but Levi became lame.

R. Eliezer said: A man must never speak to Him above in reproach, for, lo, a great man spoke to Him above in reproach, and he became lame. Who was it? Levi.[6]

282. R. Judah [II] the Patriarch decreed a fast, during which he prayed for God's compassion, but no rain came. So he said, "What a difference between Samuel the Ramathite and Judah ben Gamaliel! [Samuel the Ramathite decreed no fast, yet rain fell,[7] while Judah decrees a fast, and no rain falls.] Alas for the generation that is in such a plight. Alas for him to whom such a thing happens!" He felt humiliated, and then rain came.[8]

283. Once R. Judah, seeing two men playfully tossing bread at each other, exclaimed, "It seems that there is a superfluity of food in the world!" He cast an angry look at the wasters, and a famine ensued. So the sages said to R. Kahana son of R. Nehunia, a disciple ministering as R. Judah's attendant, "You, sir, who are constantly with him, should persuade him to go out by the door next to the marketplace."[9] He prevailed upon him, and R. Judah went out into the marketplace. Seeing a large crowd there, he asked, "What is the matter?" He was told, "They stand around the offal of ground dates, which is for sale." He exclaimed, "There is evidently famine in the world," and said to his attendant, "Take off my shoes." As soon as the attendant had taken off one shoe, rain began to fall. As the attendant was about to take off the other shoe [the prophet] Elijah appeared and said to him, "The Holy One said: If you take off the other shoe, I will lay waste to the world [with a flood]."[10]

284. Once Rabbah decreed a fast and besought God's mercy, but rain did not fall. He was asked, "Why was it that whenever R. Judah decreed a fast, rain did fall?" Rabbah replied, "What can I do? If it is because of learning, we are superior to them, for in R. Judah's days all of them studied only the division Nezikin, whereas we study all six divisions of the Mishnah. And yet when R. Judah had just one of his shoes taken off, rain fell, while we cry out for rain all day long, and no one heeds us. If it is because of good deeds—if anyone has seen something wrong in me, let him come and say so. Well, what can a generation's leaders do when the generation does not appear good enough [in the eyes of God]?"[1]

285. Once R. Nahman decreed a fast and besought God's mercy, but rain did not fall. When he went home, he said, "Take Nahman and throw him from the roof to the ground," he felt so humiliated. And then the rain came down.[2]

286. R. Papa decreed a fast.[3] Feeling weak, he gulped down a plateful of grits, then resumed his prayer for God's mercy, but no rain came. R. Nahman bar Ish Prati ("Man of the Euphrates")[4] said tauntingly, "If the master would only gulp down another plateful of grits, rain will surely come." R. Papa felt ashamed and humiliated. And then the rain came.[5]

287. R. Hiyya bar Luliani said: I heard the clouds say, "Let us go and bring down rain on Ammon and Moab." So I said to them, "When the Holy One was about to give the Torah, He went around with it to every nation and tongue, but none accepted it, until Israel came forward and accepted it. Yet you would now leave Israel and bring down rain upon Ammon and Moab! Pour down the rain on the spot where you are." And they did so.[6]

288. "Ask ye of the Lord rain . . . the Lord maketh hazizim" (Zech. 10:1). What is meant by "the Lord maketh [many] hazizim"? R. Yose son of R. Hanina said: The verse implies that the Holy One makes a haziz [a rain cloud] for each and every righteous man for his own need.

"And He will give them showers of rain—to everyone [a bed of] grass in the field" (Zech. 10:1). R. Daniel bar Ketina had a garden patch, which he used to examine every day and say, "This bed needs water and that one does not." At that, rain would come down and water every spot that needed water.[7]

289. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: When Israel merit it, rains come down on all that grows—trees and sown produce—and the world is blessed. But when they sin, the rains come down only into seas and rivers.[8]

290. Resh Lakish said: What is implied in "And He will shut up the heavens" (Deut. 11:17)? That when the heavens are "shut up," unable to bring down dew and rain, they are like a woman who is in labor but cannot bring forth.[9]

291. R. Yohanan said: Porehot are a sign that rain is coming. But what are porehot? R. Papa said: Thin clouds under thick ones.

When Ulla visited Babylonia and saw porehot, he said to the people, "Bring your [perishable] things indoors, for rain will come soon." But in the end, no rain came. Ulla said, "As the Babylonians are deceivers, so their rains are deceivers."[10]

292. R. Hama bar Hanina said: A day when rain comes is as great as the day heaven and earth were created.

R. Oshaia said: Great is the day when the rain comes, for on it even deliverance is increased and multiplied, as is said, "Let the earth open, that the rains bring forth deliverance and loving-kindness" (Isa. 45:8).[11]

293. "The Lord will open unto thee His good treasure" (Deut. 28:12). See how great is the coming down of rain. R. Judah son of R. Ezekiel said: Whenever my late father saw rain coming down, he recited the prayer: May the Name of Him who spoke and the world came into being be magnified, hallowed, blessed, and exalted, for He appoints thousands of thousands and myriads of myriads of angels for each and every drop that comes down. Why? Because from here to the sky is a distance that takes five hundred years to traverse, yet when rain comes down, not one drop intermingles with another.[12]

294. R. Abbahu said: The day when rain comes is greater than the day of resurrection, since the day of resurrection is only for the righteous, whereas the day when rain comes is for both the righteous and the wicked.

R. Judah said: The day when rain comes is as great as the day on which the Torah was given, for it is said, "My doctrine shall drop as the rain" (Deut 32:2), and "doctrine" here means Torah, as in "I give you good doctrine; forsake ye not My teaching" (Prov. 4:2). Rava said: Even greater than the day the Torah was given, for it is said, "My doctrine shall drop as the rain." Now, which is usually compared to which? You must admit that [God's doctrine] the less important is compared to the more important [rain].[13]

295. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: Three things—earth, man, and rain—are equal in importance. And each of the three, R. Levi bar Hiyya pointed out, is made up of three letters.[14] This should teach you that if there were no earth, there would be no rain; if there were no rain, there would be no earth; and if there were neither, man could not exist.[1]

296. R. Tanhum bar Hiyya said: The sending of rain is greater than the giving of Torah, for while the giving of Torah was a joy to Israel, the sending of rain gives joy to all the world—to cattle, to wild beasts, and to fowl.[2]

297. R. Hiyya bar Abba said: The power of rain is greater than the resurrection of the dead, since resurrection is for man alone, while rain is for both man and beast; resurrection is for Israel alone, while rain is not only for Israel but also for the nations of the world.[3]

298. A certain heathen inquired of R. Joshua ben Korhah, saying to him: You have your festivals, and we have ours. When you are rejoicing, we are not, and when we are rejoicing, you are not. When do both we and you rejoice? When rain comes down. And the proof? The verse "The meadows are clothed with flocks; the valleys also are covered with corn; they shout for joy, yea, they sing" (Ps. 65:14). And what follows directly? "Shout unto the Lord, all the earth" (Ps. 66:1)—not just priests, Levites, or lay Israelites, but all the earth.[4]

299. R. Hisda said: Ever since the day the Temple was destroyed, rain does not come down from the good treasury, for it is said, "[In the Land which the Lord swore unto thy fathers to give thee], the Lord will open unto thee His good treasury" (Deut. 28:11–12). When Israel obey the will of Him who is everywhere and so dwell in their own Land, rains come down from the good treasury; but when Israel do not dwell in their own Land, rains do not come down from the good treasury.[5]

300. We have been taught that R. Eleazar ben Perata said: Ever since the day the Temple was destroyed, the rains have become irregular and arbitrary for the world. One year the rains are abundant, another year they are meager; one year rain comes down in season, another year it does not.

What parable shows what happens in a year when rain comes down in season? The one of a servant to whom his master gives the weekly food allowance [in advance] on the first day of the week, with the result that the dough is well baked and the bread palatable. What parable shows what happens in a year when the rains do not come down in season? The one of a servant to whom his master gives the weekly food allowance late on Friday, with the result that the dough is not well baked[6] and the bread is not palatable.

What parable shows what happens in a year when the rains are abundant? The one of a master who gives his servant the [yearly] food allowance all at once: the waste in the mill when grinding a kor [of grain] is no more than [the waste] in grinding a kav;[7] and likewise the waste in the trough when kneading a kor [of flour] is no more than when kneading a kav. What parable shows what happens in a year when the rains are meager? The one of a master who gives his servant the [yearly] food allowance little by little: the waste in the mill when grinding a kav [of grain] is no less than in grinding a kor; and likewise the waste in the trough when kneading a kav [of flour] is no less than when kneading a kor. Another illustration: What parable shows what happens when the rains are abundant? The one of a man molding clay: if he has abundant water, it will not give out and the clay will be molded well; but if the available water is meager, it will soon give out, and the clay will not be well molded.[8]

301. Our masters taught: "I will give you rains in their season" (Lev. 26:4), with the result that the soil will be neither soaked nor parched, but moderately watered. Whenever rains are excessive, they wash away the soil, so that it yields no fruit. Another interpretation: "In their season," so that rains come down only on the eves of Wednesday and Friday. Thus we find that in the days of Simeon ben Shetah, rains came down for them on the eves of Wednesdays and Fridays, so that grains of wheat grew as large as kidney beans, and grains of barley as large as olive pits, and lentils as large as gold denars. Specimens of them were kept for future generations, to show what loss sin causes, as is said, "Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withheld bounty from you" (Jer. 5:25). We also find that in the days of Herod, when the people were occupied with the rebuilding of the Temple, rain would come down during the night, but in the morning the wind blew, the clouds dispersed, and the sun shone, so that all the people were able to go out to their work—thus they knew that they were engaged in work for the sake of Heaven.[9]

302. Our masters taught: The alarm may be sounded on account of any calamity that comes upon a community except excessive rain. Why not? R. Yohanan said: Because we should not pray for the cessation of superabundant blessing, for it is said, "I will surely open for you the windows of heaven, and pour out a blessing for you that there shall be more than enough" (Mal. 3:10). What is meant by "more than enough"? Rami bar R. Hiyya said: That your lips will grow weary[10] saying, "It is enough." However, in the Diaspora,[11] said Rama bar R. Judah in the name of Rav, the alarm may be sounded on account of such superabundance.

In a year of abundant rain, the lay posts in the provinces would send word to their delegates on the watch [in Jerusalem]: "[When praying], direct your thoughts to your brethren in the Diaspora, so that their houses may not become their graves."

When R. Eliezer was asked, "How long must rain keep coming down before we are allowed to pray for it to cease?" he replied, "When a man standing on the wall of Ophel is able to splash his feet in the water" [of the brook of Kidron, which is considerably below the wall of Ophel. For as] Rabbah bar Bar Hana related, "Once, while standing on the wall of Ophel,[1] I saw [below] an Arab riding on a camel and holding a spear in his hand—to me, the Arab looked as small as a flax worm.[2]

303. "I will pour out a blessing for you that there shall be more than enough" (Mal. 3:10), which means—so said the sages in the name of Rav—until your lips will grow weary saying, "It is enough." For in this world [excessive] rains inconvenience human beings: they who set out on a journey are distressed by them, they who sail the sea are distressed by them, they who tread wine vats and who plaster roofs are distressed by them. But in the time-to-come, the Holy One will make them [always] a blessing.[3]

304. Our masters taught: ["The alarm may be sounded if houses are collapsing"]. The collapsing of houses spoken of here refers to sound houses, not to rickety ones; to such as are not liable to collapse, not to such as are liable to collapse.[4]

305. Our masters taught: The alarm for wild beasts, of which the sages have spoken, is to be sounded when the beasts constitute a visitation, but not otherwise. When are wild beasts considered a visitation, and when not? When they appear in the city, it is a visitation: when only in the fields, it is not. If by day, it is a visitation; if only by night, it is not. If a beast, seeing two persons together, pursues them, it is a visitation; but if it hides itself on seeing them, it is not. If it has torn two persons and devoured only one of them,[5] that is a visitation; but if it has devoured both of them, it is not. If it has climbed to a roof and seized an infant out of his cradle, it is a visitation.[6]

306. Rami bar Hama said: No wild beast prevails over a human being until he seems to it to be like a beast, as is said, "When he is like the beasts, he perisheth" (Ps. 49:13).[7]

307. In the days of R. Hiyya bar Abba, a [re'em's] whelp invaded the Land of Israel and left no tree that it did not uproot. A fast was proclaimed, and R. Hiyya prayed. As a result, the whelp's dam roared out of the wilderness, and at the sound of her voice, it went down [to the wilderness to meet her].[8]

308. What is an epidemic? When, in a city capable of furnishing five hundred foot soldiers, three men [in normal health] die, one each day, on three successive days, that is an epidemic. When fewer than three men [in normal health] die, it is not an epidemic.[9]

309. Our masters taught: When there is an epidemic in the city, keep your feet [within your house], as is said, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers . . . until the rage passes" (Isa. 26:20).

During an epidemic, Rava used to keep [his] windows shut in fear of "Death is come up into our windows" (Jer. 9:20).

Our masters taught: When there is famine in a city, take to your heels, as is said, "And there was a famine in the Land, and Abram went down into Egypt" (Gen. 12:10).

When there is an epidemic in a city, one should not walk in the middle of the road, because [at such a time] the angel of death walks in the middle of the road. When there is peace in a city, one should not walk at the sides of the road.[10]

When there is an epidemic in a city, a man should not enter the synagogue alone, because the angel of death deposits his implements there. This, however, is true only of a synagogue in which children do not read Scripture and ten adults do not pray together.

When dogs howl, the angel of death has come to the city. When dogs frolic, the prophet Elijah has come.[11]

310. R. Joseph taught: What is implied by "None of you shall go out of the house until the morning" (Exod. 12:22)? That once permission is granted to the angel of destruction, he does not distinguish between the righteous and the wicked.[12]

311. The sages taught: Michael arrives [at his destination] with but one flap of his wings; Gabriel, with two flaps; Elijah, with four; the angel of death, with eight—but during an epidemic, he arrives with but one flap of his wings.[13]

312. The croup—if people die of it, the alarm should be sounded; if not, the alarm need not be sounded.[14]

313. In the days of R. Samuel ben Nahmani, there was famine accompanied by pestilence. The sages said: What are we to do? Shall we beseech mercy for the cessation of both? One may not pray [at the same time for the cessation of two afflictions]. So we shall beseech mercy for the cessation of the epidemic, and [resign ourselves to] suffer hunger. But R. Samuel ben Nahmani said to them: Let us rather pray for the cessation of the famine, for when the Holy One gives plenty, He gives it only to the living, as is said, "Thou openest Thy hand, and satisfiest every living thing with favor" (Ps. 145:16).[1]

314. Our masters taught: The sword concerning which sages said [the alarm should be sounded] is the sword [of soldiers] moving from place to place, even if it be the sword of peace, let alone the sword intended as punishment.[2]

Warfare

315. People may not be sent to fight in an optional war without consent of the court of seventy-one.[3]

316. "And it shall be, when ye draw nigh unto the battle, that the priest shall approach" (Deut. 20:2)—the priest anointed for battle. "And speak unto the people" (ibid.)—speak in the holy tongue. "And shall say unto them: 'Hear, O Israel, ye draw nigh this day unto battle against your enemies' " (Deut. 20:3)—not against your brethren, not Judah against Simeon nor Simeon against Benjamin, so that if you fall into their hands, they are likely to have mercy upon you, as it is said, "And the men that have been mentioned by name rose up, and took the captives, and with the spoil clothed all that were naked among them, and arrayed them, and shod them, and gave them to eat and to drink, and anointed them, and carried all the feeble of them upon asses, and brought them to Jericho, the city of palm trees, unto their brethren; then they returned to Samaria" (2 Chron. 28:15). [Remember that] you march against your enemies, who will have no mercy upon you if you should fall into their hands. "Let not your heart faint" (Deut. 20:3) at the neighing of horses and the flashing of swords. "Fear not" (ibid.) because of the crash of shields and the noise of soldiers' nail-studded boots. "Nor be alarmed" (ibid.) at the sound of trumpets. "Neither be ye affrighted" (ibid.) at the sound of war cries. "For the Lord your God is He that goeth with you" (Deut. 20:4). They come [relying] on the strength of flesh and blood, but you come [relying] on the strength of Him who is everywhere. The Philistines came [relying on] the strength of Goliath. But what was his end? In the end he fell by the sword, and they fell with him. The Ammonites came [relying] on the strength of Shobach. But what was his end? In the end he fell by the sword, and they fell with him. But with you it is otherwise: "The Lord your God is He that goeth with you to fight for you against your enemies" (Deut. 20:4). [This alludes to] the Ark bivouacked [with Israel's army].[4]

317. "Let not your heart faint; fear not, nor be alarmed, neither be ye affrighted at them" (Deut. 20:3). [These four expressions] correspond to the four means adopted by the nations of the world [to terrorize the enemy]: they crash [their shields], blast [trumpets], shout [battle cries], and stamp [with their horses].[5]

318. "And the officers shall speak unto the people, saying: 'What man is there that hath built a new house, and hath not dedicated it? let him go and return to his house,' " etc. (Deut. 20:5). All such—after hearing the words of the priest appointed to go with the Ark to war concerning the regulations governing those who are required to go to war—return to their homes, where they send supplies of water and food, and where they keep the roads in repair.[6]

319. "And the officers shall speak further to the people, and they shall say: 'What man is there that is fearful and faint-hearted?' " (Deut. 20:8). R. Akiva said: "Fearful and faint-hearted" is to be understood literally, that he is unable to stand in the line of battle and look at a drawn sword. R. Yose the Galilean said: "Fearful and faint-hearted" means that he is fearful because of the transgressions he committed. That is why the Torah gave him the opportunity to return for the other reasons [such as that he has built a house or planted a vineyard].[7]

320. R. Yohanan ben Zakkai said: Come and see how considerate the Holy One is of human dignity. When someone returns because he is fearful and faint-hearted, people who see him [avoiding military service] will merely say, "Perhaps he has just built a house," "Perhaps he has recently planted a vineyard," "Perhaps he has recently betrothed a wife."

Yet in all these cases, the people claiming exemption from military service [on the ground that they have just built a new house or recently planted a vineyard, or that they are newly wed] have to bring witnesses to attest that this is really so. The exception is the man who is fearful and faint-hearted—he is his own witness: when he hears the sound of crashing shields, he is frightened; the sound of neighing horses, he trembles; the sound of blasting trumpets, he panics. When he sees the unsheathing of swords, urine streams down between his knees [and he doesn't have to prove to others that he is faint-hearted].[8]

321. "And it shall be, when the officers have made an end of speaking unto the people, that army guards shall be posted in front of [and behind] the people" (Deut. 20:9): in front of and behind the rearmost contingent of the people are set guards against desertion, with iron axes in their hands. Should anyone wish to flee, they have the authority to strike his thighs, because flight is the beginning of defeat.

To what do such precautions apply? To optional wars.

But in obligatory wars, all must go forth, even a bridegroom from his nuptial chamber and a bride from her bridal bower.[1]

322. In session, none is as good as a man on in years; and in war, none as good as a young man.[2]

323. Common soldiers advance and start the battle, but it is the seasoned veterans who go down into the fray and win victory.[3]

324. "And he shall stand before Eleazar the Priest, who shall inquire for him by the judgment of the Urim before the Lord" (Num. 27:21). The verse shows that when Israel go out to war, the court above sits to decide whether they are to be victorious or defeated.[4]

325. "And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed" (Exod. 17:11). But did the hands of Moses actually wage war or win victories? Not actually; what the text means is that as long as Israel turned their thoughts upward and submitted their hearts to their Father in heaven, they prevailed. Otherwise, they fell.[5]

326. We have been taught: When heathens lay siege to towns in Israel, one may not go forth with weapons [on the Sabbath] on account of them, nor on account of them profane the Sabbath in any way. When does this rule apply? When the heathens come to seize money. But when they come to destroy lives, one may go forth with weapons on account of them and profane the Sabbath on account of them. When the town is near the border, even if the heathens come not to destroy lives, but only to get hold of straw and stubble, one may go forth with weapons on account of them and profane the Sabbath on their account.[6]

327. We have been taught: Formerly [Jews returning from war on a Sabbath] would leave their weapons in a house near the town wall.[7] One time, the heathens became aware of what the Jews had been doing. So they kept pursuing them. When the Jews rushed back into that house to get their weapons, with the heathens right behind them, the Jews pushed against one another so hard that they accidentally slew more than the heathens had slain. Then it was ordained that Jews may return to their own homes with their weapons.[8]

328. A man should not go out on the Sabbath carrying a sword, a bow, a shield, a lance, or a spear. R. Eliezer objected: They are his ornaments. But the sages said: They are in fact a reproach to him, for Scripture says, "They shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; . . . neither shall they learn war any more" (Isa. 2:4).[9]

329. R. Eliezer ben Jacob said: What is the proof that a woman may not go forth with weapons to war? From "A warrior's[10] gear may not be put on a woman" (Deut. 22:5).[11]

PART VI

CHAPTER ONE

THE WORLD AND ALL THAT IT HOLDS

The World

1. "Lo, these are but the outskirts of His ways; and how small a whisper is heard of Him! But the thunder of His mighty deeds who can understand?" (Job 26:14). R. Huna said: All you see is but the outskirts of the Holy One's ways. If a man say to you, "I can comprehend the order of the world," reply, "Since you cannot comprehend [the ways of] a mortal king, how do you suppose you can comprehend [the ways of] the King who is King of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He?"[1]

2. Three things were created before the creation of the world—water, wind, and fire. The water conceived and gave birth to thick darkness; the fire conceived and gave birth to light; the wind conceived and gave birth to wisdom. For this reason did David say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul! O Lord my God, Thou art very great . . . who layest the beams of Thine upper chambers in the waters . . . who walkest upon the wings of the wind . . . the flaming fires Thy messengers" (Ps. 104:1–4). For when man sees a beautiful pillar, he exclaims, "Blessed be He who has created the source from which this was hewn." When he sees how beautiful the world is, he says, "Blessed be the Omnipresent who has hewed it out and created it with the word; happy are you, O world, because the Holy One rules you."[2]

3. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: At the time the Holy One created the world, it went on extending farther [in both directions], like two unwound clews of thread, until the Holy One rebuked it and brought it to a standstill: "The pillars of heaven swayed [hither and yon], until they were appalled at the thunder of His rebuke" (Job 26:11). That, too, is what Resh Lakish said: What is meant by "I am God Shaddai" (Gen. 17:2 and 35:11)? I am He who said to My world: "Dai, Enough!"

Resh Lakish also said: When the Holy One created the sea, it went on extending, until the Holy One rebuked it and caused it to dry up, as is said: "He rebuked the sea and made it dry" (Nah. 1:4).[3]

4. The world is formed like an orb, and the sea like a bowl.

R. Jonah said: Alexander of Macedon wished to ascend on high, and he ascended [on a couch][4] higher and higher until he saw the world like an orb and the sea like a bowl. On account of this, they depict him [Alexander] with an orb in his hand.[5]

5. We have been taught that R. Yose said: Alas for human beings who see but know not what they see, stand but know not on what they stand. On what does the earth rest? On pillars, for it is said, "Who shaketh the earth out of her place, and the pillars thereof tremble" (Job 9:6). The pillars [rest] upon the waters: "To Him that spread forth the earth above the waters" (Ps. 136:6). The waters, upon the mountains: "The waters stood upon the mountains" (Ps. 104:6). The mountains, on the wind: "For lo, He that formeth the mountains and createth the wind" (Amos 4:13). The wind [rests] upon the storm: "The wind—the storm executeth its command" (Ps. 148:8). Storm is suspended above the arm of the Holy One: "And underneath are the everlasting arms" (Deut. 33:27). But the sages said: [The world] rests on twelve pillars: "He set the [number of] borders for the peoples to be the same number as the tribes] of Israel" (Deut. 32:8); some say on seven pillars: "Wisdom . . . hath hewn out her seven pillars" (Prov. 9:1). R. Eleazar ben Shammua said: [It rests] on one pillar, whose name is Righteous: "Righteous is the foundation of the world" (Prov. 10:25).[6]

6. There are seven levels to the universe; the upper level [of the heavens], the lower level, the world's atmosphere, and the four upper spheres.[7]

7. R. Judah said: There are two firmaments, for it is said, "Behold, unto the Lord thy God belongeth heaven, and the heaven above heaven" (Deut. 10:14). Resh Lakish said: Seven, namely, Curtain, Expanse, Grinders, Habitation, Dwelling, Treasury, Heavy Clouds. The Curtain serves no function other than to be placed in its sheath in the morning and taken out of its sheath in the evening, thus renewing daily the work of creation. The Expanse is that wherein sun, moon, stars, and planets are fixed. The Grinders is that in which millstones stand and grind manna for the righteous. Habitation is that in which Jerusalem, the Temple, and the altar are built—the altar where Michael, the great prince, stands and daily brings an offering. The Dwelling is that in which there are innumerable companies of ministering angels, who utter song at night and are hushed during the day in deference to Israel [who intone song during the day]. The Treasury is that in which there are stores of snow, stores of hail, the loft of noxious dews, the loft of raindrops, the chamber of the storm and of the whirlwind, and the cave of vapor—the doors of all these are of fire. Heavy Cloud is that in which are stored righteousness, judgment, and mercy; the treasures of life, the treasures of peace, and the treasures of blessing; the souls of the righteous and the spirits and souls of those yet to be created; and the dew with which the Holy One will revive the dead. There also are the ofannim,[1] the seraphim, the celestial creatures, the ministering angels, and the throne of glory; the King, the living and enduring God, high and exalted, dwells above them, surrounded by darkness, cloud masses, and thick clouds.

R. Aha bar Jacob said: There is still another firmament above the heads of the celestial creatures.

So far you have permission to speak—beyond this, you have no permission to speak, for thus it is written in the book of Ben Sira:

> Do not pry into things too hard for you.
> Or examine what is beyond your reach.
> Meditate on the commandments you have been given;
> What the Lord keeps secret is no concern of yours.[2]

8. We have been taught: Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai asked: What answer did the divine voice give that wicked [Nebuchadnezzar] when he said, "I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High" (Isa. 14:14)? [Rabban Yohanan declared]: The divine voice went forth and said: O wicked man, son of a wicked man, grandson of the wicked Nimrod who during his reign stirred the entire world, all of it, to rebel—how many are man's years? "Three score years and ten, or even by reason of strength fourscore years" (Ps. 90:10). But it is a five hundred years' journey from earth to heaven, and a five hundred years' journey across the thickness of heaven, and a similar distance from each heaven to the one above it. Above the heavens are the celestial creatures. The journey across each of the feet of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across the ankles of each of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across each of the legs of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across each of the knees of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across each of the thighs of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across the body of each of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across the neck of each of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across the head of each of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across each of the horns of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together. Above them is the throne of glory, and the journey across each of the legs of the throne of glory takes as much time as all the previous journeys together. And above them dwells God, living and enduring, lofty and exalted. And yet you [Nebuchadnezzar] say, "I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High."[3]

9. Four quarters have been created in the world: a quarter facing the east, one facing the west, one facing the south, and one facing the north. From the quarter facing the east, light goes forth to the world. From the quarter facing south, dews of blessing go forth to the world. From the quarter facing west, where are the treasuries of snow and the treasuries of hail, come forth into the world cold, heat, and rains. The quarter facing north, God created but did not complete, for He said: Anyone who dares declare, "I am a God," let him come and complete this quarter which I left [incomplete].

There [in the north] is the abode of agents of destruction—[evil] spirits and demons; from there, evil goes forth into the world, as is said, "Out of the north, evil shall break forth" (Jer. 1:14).[4]

10. Seven qualities minister before the throne of glory: faithfulness, righteousness, justice, loving-kindness, compassion, truth, and peace, as is said, "[I will betroth thee unto Me in righteousness and in justice, in loving-kindness and in compassion], and I will betroth thee unto Me in faithfulness, and thou shalt know the Lord" (Hos. 2:21); [and "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other" (Ps. 85:11)].[5]

11. "God also created the one over against the other" (Eccles. 7:14). For everything God created, He created its counterpart: He created mountains, and He created hills; He created seas, and He created rivers.[6]

12. "God also created the one over against the other" (Eccles. 7:14). The Holy One created the world in pairs, one an opposite to the other, and the other an opposite of the one, so that it might be known that each and every thing has a mate and has an opposite, and but for the one, the other would not be. But for death, there would be no life, and but for life, there would be no death. But for peace, there would be no evil, and but for evil, there would be no peace. If all human beings were fools, they would not be regarded as fools, and if all human beings were sages, they would not be recognized as sages. But for poor people, the rich would not be recognized, and but for rich people, the poor would not be recognized. He created grace and created ugliness, males and females, fire and water, iron and wood, light and darkness, heat and cold, eating and hunger, drinking and thirst, sea and dry land, work and idleness, anxiety and ease of mind, laughter and weeping, healing and sickness. If there is no cleanness, there is no uncleanness, and if there is no uncleanness, there is no cleanness. If there is no righteous man, there is no wicked man; and if no wicked man, no righteous man. [All the aforegoing] to make known the might of the Holy One, who created everything in pairs and to be mated. For all things there is an opposite, except for the Holy One, who is One and has no second.[1]

13. Pause and consider that all the Holy One's creatures borrow one from the other. The day borrows from the night and the night from the day, yet they do not strive with each other as human beings do. The moon borrows from the stars and the stars from the moon; the light borrows from the sun and the sun from the light; the heavens borrow from the earth and the earth from the heavens; wisdom borrows from understanding and understanding from wisdom; loving-kindness borrows from righteousness and righteousness from loving-kindness; Torah borrows from precepts and precepts from Torah.[2] The Holy One's creatures borrow from each other and repay each other. It is only mortal man who borrows from his fellow, and his fellow seeks to swallow him with usurious interest and cheating.

Moreover, he who exacts interest says to the Holy One, "Why do You not take payment from Your world in which Your creatures are—payment from the earth, to which You give drink; payment from the flowers, which You make grow; payment from the lights, which You cause to shine; payment from the soul, which You breathe into them; payment from the body, which You preserve?" The Holy One replies, "See how much I lend, yet take no interest, and how much the earth lends and takes no interest. I take only the capital I lent, even as the earth takes her capital, for Scripture declares, 'The dust returneth to the earth as it was, and the spirit returneth unto God who gave it' " (Eccl. 12:7).[3]

Heaven and the Luminaries

14. Shamayim, "heaven," said R. Yose bar Hanina, is a composite of sham, "there," and mayim, "water." The sages taught in a Baraita that the word is a composite of esh, "fire," and mayim, "water." This proves that the Holy One worked them into each other until He made the firmament out of them.

Another explanation: Shamayim is so called because men wonder (mishtomemim) at it, saying: Of what (shel mah) is it composed? Of fire? Of water? It is an enigma.[4]

15. The Holy One created twelve constellations in the firmament. For each and every constellation, He created thirty hosts; and for each and every host, He created thirty legions; and for each and every legion, He created thirty cohorts; and for each and every cohort, thirty camps; and to each and every camp He appended three hundred and sixty-five thousands of myriads of stars, corresponding to the days of the solar year.[5]

16. There is a constellation that completes its circuit in twelve months—the sun; and there is a constellation that completes its circuit in thirty days—the moon; there is a constellation that completes its circuit in twelve years—Jupiter; and there is a constellation that completes its circuit in thirty years—Saturn. Aside from the aforementioned, Mercury, Venus, and Mars complete their circuits in four hundred and eighty years.[6]

17. The Pleiades gives taste to fruit, and Orion draws together each nodule [of the fruit] to the one adjoining it.[7]

18. At night, though it be night, one has the light of the moon, the stars, and the planets. Then when is it really dark? Just before dawn! After the moon sets and the stars set and the planets vanish, there is no darkness deeper than the hour before dawn. And in that hour the Holy One answers the world and all that are in it: out of the darkness He brings forth the dawn and gives light to the world.

The hind of the dawn [the morning star]—its light rays out as it rises. At the beginning, light comes little by little; then it spreads wider and wider, grows and increases; and at last it bursts into shining glory.[8]

19. We have been taught that Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: The moon's column of light is not like the sun's column of light: the moon's column rises straight like a rod; while the sun's column rays out in all directions.[9]

20. Rav said: When the orb of the sun and the orb of the moon enter to get permission from the Holy One, their eyes are dimmed by the radiance of the Presence, so that when they wish to go out to give light to the world, they can see nothing at all. What then does the Holy One do to them? He shoots ahead of them arrows by whose light they go: "When the sun and the moon have come to a standstill in their habitations, they go by the light of Thine arrows, by the shining of Thy glittering spear" (Hab. 3:11).

R. Levi said: Each and every day the Holy One has to sit in judgment over the sun and the moon, because the sun and the moon do not wish to go forth to give light to the world. What reason do they give? They say, "Mortals offer incense to us, mortals bow down to us." What does the Holy One do about them? R. Yusta bar Shunem said:

He sits in judgment over them, until reluctantly they go forth to give light to the world, as is said, "Every morning doth He send down His judgment to the light, that it faileth not" (Zeph. 3:5).[1]

21. When the sun and the moon are about to go back in, they cannot tell where to go because of the radiance from above, and so they stand in the firmament and dawdle before entering, but the Holy One hurls torches, arrows, and spears of light before them. And toward the place where He hurls them, there they go.[2]

22. "The chariot of it is purple" (Song 3:10). The sun, which is set on high, rises in a chariot[3] and gives light to the world as it rides forth garlanded like a bridegroom, in keeping with "The sun, which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber," etc. (Ps. 19:6).[4]

23. The orb of the sun is kept within a sheath, in front of which there is a pool of water. When the sun comes out, the Holy One tempers its strength in the water, so that as it goes forth it will not incinerate the world.[5]

24. R. Levi said: Why is a man's voice not as audible by day as it is by night? Because of the sun's orb, which saws [its way] through the firmament as a carpenter saws through cedars. Even though the "sawdust" of the sun is called la, "nothing," [the sound made by the sawing of the sun's orb is deafening].[6]

25. Our masters taught: Were it not for the sound made by the sun's orb, the sound of Rome's tumult would be heard; and were it not for the sound of Rome's tumult, the sound of the sun's orb would be heard.

Our masters taught: There are three sounds that go from one end of the world to the other, yet the creatures within the world are not even aware of them: the sound of the sun's orb, the sound of Rome's tumult, and the sound of the soul as it leaves the body.[7]

26. Our masters taught: As to twilight, it is doubtful whether it is part day and part night, or whether all of it is day or all of it is night. How long does twilight last? After sunset, as long as the east still has a reddish glow: when the lower [sky] is pale but not the upper, it is twilight; [but] when the upper [sky] is as pale as the lower, it is night. Such is the opinion of R. Judah. R. Nehemiah said: [Twilight lasts after sunset] as long as it takes a man to walk half a mil. R. Yose said: Twilight is like the twinkling of an eye as night enters and the day departs, and it is impossible to determine its length.[8]

27. To what may twilight be compared? R. Tanhuma said: To a drop of blood placed on the tip of a sword—the instant it takes the drop to divide into two parts, that is twilight.[9]

28. R. Hanina said: He who wishes to know the length of twilight as defined by R. Nehemiah should leave Carmel's summit while the sun is still shining, go down and take a dip in the sea, and come up again—such is R. Nehemiah's estimate of the duration of twilight.[10]

29. At evening prayer, a man should say, "May it be Your will, O Lord my God, that You bring me forth from darkness into light." At morning prayer, a man should say, "I thank You, O Lord my God, that You have brought me out of darkness into light." At afternoon prayer, a man should say, "May it be Your will, O Lord my God, that as You have privileged me to see the sun's rising, You will privilege me to see its setting."[11]

30. Our masters taught: He who sees the sun at its cycle's beginning,[12] the moon in its power,[13] the stars in their orbits [as at the beginning of time], and the signs of the zodiac in their original order should say, "Blessed be He who wrought the work of creation."[14]

31. We have been taught that R. Eliezer said: The world is like an exedra,[15] with its north side not enclosed, and so when the sun reaches the northwest corner, it makes a detour as it returns above the firmament [to the east]. However, R. Joshua said that the world is like a tent,[16] with its north side also enclosed, and so when the sun reaches the northwest corner, it goes around the tent's rear [until it reaches the east],[17] as Scripture says, "It goeth toward the south and turneth again toward the north" (Eccles. 1:6)—"it goeth toward the south" by day and "turneth again toward the north" by night. "It turneth about continually in its course, and the wind returneth again to its circuits" (Eccles 1:6): this refers to the eastern and western sides of heaven, which at times the sun traverses and at other times runs parallel to.[18]

The exedra is a flat, semicircular shape, and so R. Eliezer advocates a two-dimensional model of the sun–earth. The tent is a solid object, and R. Joshua therefore proposes a three-dimensional model" (Professors Philip J. Davis and David Pingree of Brown University).

32. The Holy One created three hundred and sixty-five windows for the world to use: one hundred and eighty-two in the east, one hundred and eighty-two in the west, and one in the firmament's middle, out of which the sun issued at the beginning of the work of creation.[1]

33. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: We do not know whether the sun and the moon fly through the air, glide across the firmament, or have a regular route assigned to them. It is an exceedingly difficult matter, and no person can fathom it.[2]

34. Antoninus asked Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch], "Why does the sun rise in the east and set in the west?" Rabbi: "Were it the other way around, you would have asked the same question." Antoninus: "My question still stands—why should the sun set in the west? [Why does it not return to the east, where it rose, or to any other point in the sky?"] Rabbi: "The sun sets in the west to make obeisance to its Maker, as is said, 'The host of the heavens make obeisance to Thee' " (Neh. 9:6). Antoninus: "Then let the sun go midway in heaven, make obeisance, and set at once." Rabbi: "[The sun sinks gradually] for the sake of workers and wayfarers."[3]

35. Our masters taught: The sages of Israel maintain that the sphere is stationary, but the constellations revolve; while the sages of the nations of the world maintain that the sphere revolves and the constellations in it are stationary. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] observed: The fact that we never find the Wain in the south or Scorpio in the north is a refutation of what the sages of the nations maintain.

The sages of Israel maintain that the sun travels beneath the sky by day, [and thus is seen] and above the sky at night; while the sages of the nations of the world maintain that it travels beneath the sky by day and below the earth at night. Said Rabbi: Their view is preferable to ours, for springs are cold during the day but hot during the night.[4]

We have been taught that R. Nathan said: In summer, the sun travels in the high part of heaven; therefore the whole world is hot, while the springs are cold. In winter, the sun travels in the lower part of heaven; therefore the whole world, all of it, is cold, while the springs are hot.

Our masters taught: The sun travels over four courses: during Nisan, Iyyar, and Sivan, it travels over the mountains, in order to melt the snows; during Tammuz, Av, and Elul, over the inhabited world, to ripen the fruits; during Tishri, Marheshvan, and Kislev, over seas, to dry up the rivers; during Tevet, Shevat, and Adar, through the wilderness, so as not to dry up the seeds [planted in the ground].[5]

36. R. Judah bar Ilai said: The sun is kept within its sheath, as is said, "As for the sun, He set into a tent" (Ps. 19:5). But during the Tammuz solstice, it emerges from its sheath to ripen fruits.[6]

37. We have been taught that R. Eliezer the Elder said: By the time the fifteenth day in the month of Av comes, the power of the sun is depleted.[7]

38. "Day unto day . . . poureth out [time] by a mere word," etc. (Ps. 19:3). The "pouring out" of time refers to the four seasons of the year. On the first day of the vernal equinox and on the first day of the autumnal equinox, day and night are equal. From the beginning of the vernal equinox up until the summer solstice, the day borrows time from the night; from the summer solstice until the autumnal equinox, the day yields time to the night; from the autumnal equinox until the winter solstice, the night borrows from the day; and from the winter solstice until the vernal equinox, the night yields time to the day, so that by the time of the vernal equinox and of the autumnal equinox, neither owes any time to the other. They borrow one from the other, in trust, and yield one to the other, in trust, and no creature hears a word exchanged between them: "There is no speech, there are no words, neither are their voices heard" (Ps. 19:4).[8]

39. R. Yohanan said: What is implied in the verse "Dominion and fear are with Him; He maketh peace in His high places" (Job 25:2)? That the sun has never seen the [dark], unshining face of the moon; nor has it seen the [dark], unshining face of the rainbow.

R. Levi said: Not one of the planets that travels through the sky ever sees the planet in front of it, only the one behind it, much like a man who goes down a ladder with his face turned backward. This is done in order that each and every planet might say, "I am the first." In such ways "He maketh peace in His high places."

R. Simeon ben Yohai taught: The firmament is water, and the stars are fire, yet they dwell with each other and do no harm one to the other, as is written, "He maketh peace in His high places."[9]

40. The tail of Scorpio is placed in the river of fire.[10]

41. "The Bear will be comforted for her children" (Job 38:32). Why does the Bear follow the Pleiades? Because the Bear says to the Pleiades, "Give me back my children." For at the time the Holy One wanted to bring a flood to the world, He took two stars from the Pleiades and brought the flood to the world. Then, when He wanted to stop it, He took two stars from the Bear and stopped it.[11]

42. What are zikin?[1] Samuel said: A comet.

Samuel said further: The lanes of heaven are as familiar to me as the lanes of Nehardea, except the comet—I do not know what it is. We have a tradition that it never passes through Orion. If it did pass through Orion, the world would be destroyed.

But we saw it pass through.

Only its radiance passed through, which made it seem as though it had passed through. R. Huna son of R. Joshua said: The heaven called Curtain was pulled aside and rolled up, so that the light of the firmament was seen.[2]

43. Our masters taught: When the sun is in eclipse, it is a bad omen for the entire world, for all of it. By what parable may the matter be illustrated? By the one of a king of flesh and blood who made a banquet for his servants and put up a lamp for them. But when he became angry at them, he said to his attendant, "Take away the lamp from them, and let them sit in the dark."

We have been taught that R. Meir said: Whenever the luminaries are in eclipse, it is a bad omen for Israel, since they are the ones most likely to receive blows, as may be illustrated by a parable: A schoolteacher comes to school with a strap in his hand. Who is the one apprehensive? The pupil who is accustomed to being punished daily.

Our masters taught: When the sun is in eclipse, it is a bad omen for the nations of the world; when the moon is in eclipse, it is a bad omen for Israel, since Israel reckon time by the moon, while the nations of the world count it by the sun. If the sun is in eclipse in the east, it is a bad omen for those who dwell in the east; if in the west, it is a bad omen for those who dwell in the west; if in the center of heaven, it is a bad omen for the entire world, for all of it. If its visage is as red as blood, [it is a sign that] the sword is coming to the world; if it is the color of sackcloth, the arrows of famine are coming to the world; if it resembles both,[3] then both the sword and the arrows of famine are coming to the world. If the eclipse is at sunset, punishment will tarry in coming; if at dawn, punishment hastens to come to the world. Some say the meaning of the signs is to be reversed. No nation is smitten but that its gods are smitten together with it, as is said, "And against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgments" (Exod. 12:12). But when Israel carry out the will of Him who is everywhere, they need have no fear of any of these [omens]: "Thus saith the Lord: Learn not the way of the nations, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven, for the nations are dismayed at them" (Jer. 10:2). The Gentiles will be dismayed, but Israel will not be dismayed.[4]

44. R. Simeon ben Pazzi said in the name of R. Joshua ben Levi, who cited Bar Kappara: When a man knows how to calculate the seasons and planetary courses, but does not, Scripture says of him, "They regard not the work of the Lord, neither have they considered the operation of His hands" (Isa. 5:12).

R. Samuel ben Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: What is the proof that it is a man's obligation to calculate the seasons and the planetary courses? The verse "This is your wisdom and understanding in the sight of the peoples" (Deut. 4:6). What is wisdom and understanding in the sight of the peoples? The capacity to calculate seasons and courses of the planets.[5]

The Earth

45 Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said: The earth has four names: eretz, tevel, adamah, and arka, to correspond to the four seasons. Eretz, corresponds to the vernal equinox, when the earth forces up (meritzah) its produce; tevel corresponds to the summer solstice, when the earth seasons (metabbelet) its produce; adamah corresponds to the autumn equinox, when the ground is broken up by the rains into many clods of earth (adamah); and arka corresponds to the winter solstice, which causes crops to wither (moreket).[6]

46. The entire world, all of it, is made up of one-third of seas, one-third of deserts, and one-third of arable land.[7]

47. Egypt was four hundred parasangs by four hundred parasangs. Now Egypt is one-sixtieth of Ethiopia, Ethiopia one-sixtieth of the world, the world one-sixtieth of the Garden [of Eden], the Garden one-sixtieth of Eden, and Eden one-sixtieth of Gehenna. Thus the entire world, all of it, is something like the lid of a pot for Gehenna.[8]

48. R. Nathan said: The entire inhabited world is situated under a single star. You can see this for yourself. If a man fixes his eye on a star and goes east, he finds himself still under it; in fact, if he goes in any of the four directions of the world, he will find himself under it.[9]

49. R. Yose bar Hanina said: What is meant by "In a land that no man passed through, where Adam had not intended for anyone to dwell" (Jer. 2:6)? Since no man has ever passed through it, how could anyone be said to dwell there? However, the verse asserts that a land Adam decreed should be inhabited became inhabited, and a land concerning which Adam did not so decree did not become inhabited.[10]

50. Alexander of Macedon put a question to the elders of the Negev, [the south country]. He asked: Which is farther—from heaven to earth, or from east to west? They replied: From east to west. The proof is that when the sun is in the east, [it is so far away that] all men can look at it. When the sun is in the west, [it is also so far away that] all men can look at it. But when the sun is in the center of the sky, [it is so close that] no one look at it.

However, the sages said: The distance from earth to heaven and from east to west is the same. But what is the reason that, when the sun is in the center of the sky, no one look at it? Because it is completely visible, nothing obstructing the view of it.[1]

51. We have been taught: R. [Simeon ben] Gamaliel had a tube through which he looked and could see as far as two thousand cubits on dry land, and, correspondingly, two thousand cubits on the sea. If one wished to know the depth of a valley, R. Simeon would bring the tube, look through it, and ascertain the valley's depth. Incidentally, when one wished to know the height of a palm tree, he would measure his own height and his own shadow, then the shadow of the palm tree, and thus know [more or less] the height of the palm tree.[2]

Lightnings and Thunders, Clouds and Rains, Rainbows and Earthquakes

52. On seeing shooting stars, earthquakes, thunderclaps, and lightnings, one should say, "Blessed be He whose strength and might fill the world." On seeing mountains, hills, seas, rivers, and deserts, one should say, "Blessed be He who wrought the work of creation." R. Judah said: He who sees the Great [Mediterranean] Sea should say, "Blessed be He who made the Great Sea," but only if he sees it at considerable intervals.[3]

53. R. Berekhiah the Priest said: Lightning is something generated by the fire from on high. Hence, when it goes forth, its light illuminates the world from end to end.[4]

54. Rava said: A single flash, white lightning, green lightning, clouds that rise in the west and move from the south, and two clouds that rise facing each other are all [signs of] trouble. When? At night. But in the morning there is no significance to any of these phenomena.

What causes thunder? Samuel said: Clouds that rub against each other while whirling about, as Scripture says, "The voice of Thy thunder was in the whirlwind; the lightning lighted up the world, the earth trembled and shook" (Ps. 77:19). The sages, however, said: Clouds that pour water into each other. R. Aha bar Jacob said: A powerful lightning that strikes clouds and breaks off chunks of ice. R. Ashi said: There are hollows in the clouds, and when a blast of wind comes and blows through these hollows, it makes a sound like wind blowing across the opening of a cask. R. Aha bar Jacob's explanation is the most likely, for when lightning flashes, the clouds rumble, and then rain begins to fall.[5]

55. "A path for thunderclaps" (Job 38:25). I have created many thunderclaps in the clouds, and for each clap a separate path, so that two claps should not travel by the same path. For if two claps did travel by the same path, they would devastate the entire world.[6]

56. "Lo, these are but parts of His ways; . . . but the thunder of His mighty deeds who can understand?" (Job 26:14). R. Huna said: When thunder goes forth in the fullness of its force, no creature can understand it. Nevertheless, the clearheaded surmise His hints and His thoughts.[7]

57. R. Joshua ben Levi said: Thunders were created only to straighten out the crookedness of the heart: "God hath so devised it, that men should fear before Him" (Eccles. 3:14).[8]

58. R. Yohanan and R. Simeon ben Lakish differed: Cloud vapors, said R. Yohanan, come only from above, for they are described as "clouds of heaven" (Dan. 7:13). But R. Simeon ben Lakish said that cloud vapors come only from below, for "He causeth the vapors to ascend from the ends of the earth" (Ps. 135:7). R. Yohanan's view is that God's giving of the vapors is like a man's giving a cask of wine to his friend, container and all. R. Simeon's view is that even as a man says to his friend, "Lend me a measure of wheat," and his friend declares, "Bring your basket and measure it out for yourself," so the Holy One declares to the earth, "Bring Me your cloud vapor, and you will receive rain."[9]

59. R. Hanan of Sepphoris said in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: The Holy One changed the original order of things and caused the earth to be watered from above[10] for four reasons: (1) to restrain strong-arm men;[11] (2) to wash away noxious dews; (3) to water the high places as well as the low; and (4) to make all living things lift their eyes to heaven.[12]

60. We have been taught that R. Eliezer said: The earth drinks only from the waters of the Ocean, as is said, "There rose up a mist from the earth and watered the whole face of the ground" (Gen. 2:6). R. Joshua asked him: But are not the waters of the Ocean salty? R. Eliezer replied: They are made sweet in the clouds.

Nevertheless, R. Joshua maintained: The entire earth, all of it, drinks from the upper waters, for "the earth . . . drinketh water of the rain of heaven" (Deut. 11:11). If so, what is signified by "There went up a mist from the earth"? The verse shows that, by a great effort, the clouds rise up to the firmament, where they open their mouths like a leather bottle and receive the rainwater: "As with a gourd, they gather water out of His vapor" (Job 36:27).[1] Since the clouds are perforated like a sieve, they distill water to the ground, as is said, "Distilling waters from the thick clouds" (2 Sam. 22:12).[2] And between one drop and the next, there is only a hairsbreadth.[3]

61. "[The Lord answered]: . . . Who hath cleft a channel for the waterflood?" (Job 38:25). I have created many drops in the clouds, and for each and every drop I created a mold of its own, so that two drops should not issue from the same mold. For if two drops were to issue from the same mold, they would make the soil so muddy that it would yield no fruit.[4]

62. The firmament is like a lake. Above the lake is a vault, and [because of the heat of the lake] the vault exudes heavy drops of water, which, though descending into salt water, do not mingle with it.

R. Yohanan observed: Do not wonder at this, for even though the Jordan passes through the lake of Tiberias, its water does not mingle with the lake's water.

In this matter, there is the working of a miracle. For when a man sifts stalks of stubble or grains of wheat in a sieve, they intermingle while dropping a distance of two or three fingerbreadths. Yet, though the raindrops have been traveling ever so many years, they do not intermingle.[5]

63. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: Not one handbreadth [of rain] descends from above without the earth bringing up two handbreadths [of moisture] to meet it.

R. Levi said: The upper waters are male while the lower are female, and the upper waters say to the lower waters, "Receive us. You are the Holy One's creatures, while we are His messengers." At once the lower waters receive the upper waters, as is written, "Let the earth open [to receive], that it may bear the fruit of salvation with righteousness in blossom at its side. I the Lord have created it" (Isa. 45:8). I created rain for the specific purpose of benefiting the world and making it habitable.[6]

64. "When my doctrine shall break down their stubbornness, there will be rain" (Deut. 32:2).[7] R. Berekhiah said: After human beings break their stubbornness, rain will come down at once.

"And water the whole ground" (Gen. 2:6). R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Yose bar Zimra: [Through rain], everything is blessed—the give-and-take of commerce is blessed, and merchants make a profit. R. Hiyya bar Abba said: The sick too are relieved; their limbs become more supple.

Avimi of Havraya used to visit the sick. When autumn rain fell and he was asked, "How are the sick faring?" he would answer, "They feel relieved."

R. Abba said: Even a precious stone feels the rain. The sages said: Even fish feel it.

R. Phinehas related: It once happened that a fish caught off the coast of Acco was estimated to weigh three hundred litra, yet, when weighed, it came to only two hundred litra. An old fisherman who was there said, "That is because autumn rain has not yet fallen." After rain fell, they caught another fish that was estimated to weigh two hundred litra but, when weighed, was found to be three hundred litra.[8]

65. R. Joshua ben Levi said: When rain comes down, cattle long to rut.[9]

66. R. Hana of Baghdad said: Rainwater soaks, saturates, and fertilizes [the earth], and thus gives size and plumpness to fruit.[10]

67. [A cloud is called] haziz because it produces [magnificent] visions (hezyonot) in the sky and causes the holy spirit to rest on human beings.[11]

68. R. Joshua ben Levi said: When rain comes down, it [makes plants grow and thereby] gives contour to the face of the earth.[12]

69. "I will give the rain of your Land in its season, the former rain (yoreh), and the latter rain (malkosh)" (Deut. 11:14). Our masters taught: The former rain is called yoreh because it instructs (yoreh) people to plaster their roofs, to gather in their produce, and to attend to all their [other] needs [for the winter]. Another explanation: It is called yoreh because it saturates the soil and waters it to its nethermost depths: "Saturating (ravveh) her furrows, leveling her ridges, Thou makest her soft with showers; Thou blessest the growth thereof" (Ps. 65:11). Another explanation: It is called yoreh because it comes down gently (yored), not vehemently. But is it not possible that it is called yoreh, "that which shoots down," because it makes fruit fall from trees—even [young] trees—and washes away seeds? No. Scripture has here also malkosh, "latter rain," implying that as the latter rain is a blessing, so also is the former rain. But may not the latter rain be called malkosh because it knocks down houses, shatters trees, and brings up the locusts (lekesh)? No. Scripture has here yoreh, implying that as the former rain is a blessing, so also is the latter rain. How do we know that the former rain is a blessing? From the verse "Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God; for He giveth you the former rain (moreh) in [His] kindness. Now He causeth the rain to come down for you as before, the former rain and the latter rain" (Joel 2:23).[1]

70. If a man extracts rainwater from the air of Sodom and irrigates a garden bed with it, the bed will not sprout.[2]

71. R. Judah said: Wind after rain is as beneficial as rain, clouds after rain as beneficial as rain, sunshine after rain as beneficial as two rainfalls.

Rava said: One snowfall is as beneficial to mountains as five rainfalls are to level ground.

Rava said further: Snow is beneficial to mountains, vehement rain to trees, gentle rain to the produce of fields, drizzling rain even to kernels under hard clods.[3]

72. R. Yohanan said: Porehot are a sign that rain is coming. But what are porehot? R. Papa said: Thin clouds under thick clouds. R. Judah said: A mist before rain is a sign that rain is coming; in order to remember this, think of a sieve.[4] A mist after rain indicates the cessation of rain; in order to remember this, think of the excrements of goats.[5]

73. When Ulla visited Babylonia and saw porehot, he said, "Bring your [perishable] things indoors, for rain will come soon." But in the end, no rain came. So he said, "As the Babylonians are deceivers, so their rains are deceivers."

75. R. Judah bar Nahmani, Resh Lakish's interpreter, expounded: When a man looks at a rainbow, his eyes grow dim, for it is said, "As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain . . . so was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord" (Ezek. 1:28).[8]

Once, while R. Ketina was walking along a road, a rumbling was heard the instant he reached the entrance to the house of a certain necromancer. So he said, "Perhaps the necromancer knows the meaning of this rumbling." Raising his voice, the necromancer said, "Ketina, Ketina, why should I not know? When the Holy One calls to mind His children who abide in anguish in the midst of the nations of the world, He lets fall two tears into the Great [Mediterranean] Sea, and the sound is heard from one end of the world to the other—that is the cause of the rumbling [you heard]." R. Ketina's own explanation of the rumbling was that the Holy One claps His hands; R. Nathan's explanation, that the Holy One emits a sigh; and the Sages said that He stamps upon the firmament. R. Aha bar Jacob said that He presses his feet together beneath the throne of glory.[9]

Fire and Wind

77. We have been taught that R. Yose said: It had been God's intention to create fire on the eve of the Sabbath, but it was not created until Sabbath's outgoing. At the Sabbath's outgoing, the Holy One gave Adam the kind of knowledge that is analogous to the knowledge above, so that he fetched two stones, rubbed one against the other, and from between them fire came forth.[10]

78. The sages taught: Fire and hybrids were not created during the six days of creation, although it had been God's intention that they be created.[11]

79. Our masters taught that there are six kinds of fire: fire that devours but does not lap up; fire that laps up but does not devour; fire that both devours and laps up; fire that devours moist matter as well as dry matter; fire that pushes another fire away; and fire that devours fire. Fire that devours but does not lap up—that is our fire [which is quenched by water]; laps up but does not devour—a sick man's fever; devours and laps up—that of Elijah, of which it is written, "It lapped up the water that was in the trench" (1 Kings 18:38); devours both moist and dry matter—the fire of the woodpile [on the altar]; fire that pushes another fire away—that of Gabriel;[12] and fire that devours fire—that of the Presence, concerning which a master said: He put forth His finger among the angels and incinerated them.[13]

80. "And behold, the bush burned with fire, but the bush was not consumed" (Exod. 3:2). From this verse, the sages inferred that the fire above leaps up like a palm branch in tongues of flame,[1] burns but does not consume,[2] and is black. Whereas the fire below does not leap up like a palm branch, is red in color, and both burns and consumes.[3]

81. There are many kinds of light in fire.[4]

82. Fire is one-sixtieth of Gehenna.[5]

83. "He appointeth a weight for the wind" (Job 28:25). R. Joshua bar Hananiah said: When the wind goes forth from the Holy One, it endeavors to destroy the world. But the Holy One slows it down with mountains and breaks it up with hills as He commands it, "Take care not to harm My creatures."

R. Huna said: On three occasions when winds went forth, the pressure of their weight unrestrained, the world might have been destroyed by them: one in the days of Jonah, another in the days of Job, and the third in the days of Elijah.[6]

84. Once R. Huna and R. Hisda were sitting together when Geniva happened to pass by. Said one to the other, "Let us stand up for him—he is a man of Torah learning." The other replied: "Shall we stand up for a quarrelsome man?" In the meantime, Geniva came up to them and asked, "What are you occupied with?" They replied, "With winds." He said, "R. Hanan bar Rava, citing Rav, asserted the following: Every day four winds blow, and the north wind blows with each of them. Were it not so, the world could not continue to exist for a single hour. The south wind is the most violent, and if the angel who resembles the hawk did not hold it back, it would have destroyed the entire world, all of it."[7]

85. Once Rava and R. Nahman bar Isaac were sitting together when R. Nahman bar Jacob went by in a gilded litter, a cloak of shaggy green cloth spread over him. Rava went out to meet him, but R. Nahman bar Isaac did not stir, saying, "He is probably a member of the exilarch's court, whom Rava needs, while I do not need them." However, when R. Nahman bar Isaac saw that it was R. Nahman bar Jacob, he also went out to meet him. Presently, R. Nahman bar Jacob bared his arm, saying, "The east wind is blowing." Rava observed: "This is what Rav said: 'Because of it, a woman will miscarry'; while Samuel said, 'Because of it, even a pearl of the sea will rot.' "

"Though he be fruitful among his brothers, when an east wind cometh," etc. (Hos. 13:15). Rava said, "Because of it, even the pin in a plowshare becomes loose." R. Jospeh said, "Because of it, even a peg in a wall becomes loose." R. Aha bar Jacob said, "Because of it, even cane in a wicker basket becomes slack."[8]

86. The east wind is always good; the west wind always bad. The north wind is good for wheat grown to one-third [of its size] and bad for olives when they are budding. The south wind is bad for wheat grown to one-third [of its size] and good for olives when they are budding.[9]

87. R. Judah said: What is meant by the word yaarof in "My doctrine shall drop [yaarof] as the rain," etc. (Deut. 32:2)? The word yaarof [suggests] the west wind, which comes from the world's back [oref].[10] In "My speech which is like dew is deemed worthless [tizzal]" (ibid.),[11] the word tizzal [suggests] the coming of the north wind, which [withers crops and leads to such scarcity that] even gold becomes worthless [mazzelet]. In "As the he-goats [seirim] upon the tender grass" (ibid.), the word seirim suggests the east wind, which rages through the world like a he-goat [seir]. And in "As showers [revivim] upon the herb" (ibid.), the word revivim [suggests] the south wind, which brings up showers and causes the growth of herbage.[12]

88. "And it came to pass, when the sun arose, that God prepared a harishit east wind" (Jon. 4:8). What is the root meaning of harishit? That when it blows, said R. Judah, it plows [horeshet] the sea into many furrows. That when it blows, said Rabbah, its presence stills[13] all other winds.

89. We have been taught that Abba Saul said: Fine weather at Pentecost is a good sign for the year.

R. Zevid said: If the first day of New Year is warm, the year will be warm; if cold, the year will be cold.[14]

90. R. Isaac bar Avdimi said: On the night following the seventh day of Tabernacles, all watched for the smoke rising from the pile of wood [on the altar]. If the smoke inclined toward the north, poor people rejoiced and the [prosperous] householders were dejected, because the rains of the coming year were going to be excessive, and their produce would have to be left to rot.[15] If the smoke inclined toward the south, poor people were dejected and the [prosperous] householders rejoiced, because the rains of the coming year were going to be scanty, and the produce would be preserved. If the smoke turned toward the east, everyone rejoiced;[16] if toward the west, all were dejected.[17]

91. R. Nahman said: The heat emitted by the cloud-covered sun is more intense than the direct heat of the sun; in order to remember this, think of a cask of vinegar.[1] The dazzling sunlight [coming through breaks in the clouds] is worse than direct sunlight; in order to remember this, think of drippings from the roof.[2] The end of the summer is more trying than the summer itself; in order to remember this, think of a reheated oven.[3]

92. R. Levi said: Behold, you have labored—you have plowed, sown, weeded, and cropped, hoed and reaped, bound the sheaves, threshed and stacked the sheaves; still, if the Holy One did not bring forth a little wind to winnow for you, how would you stay alive?[4]

93. R. Simeon ben Halafta was a corpulent man. One day, the heat all but overpowered him. So he climbed to the top of a boulder, where he sat down and said to his daughter, "Daughter, fan me with your fan, and I will give you two talents' worth of spikenard." Just then a breeze began to blow. So he said; "How many talents' worth of spikenard do we owe the Master of this breeze?"[5]

94. There is the story of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Akiva, who [during Tabernacles] were traveling on a ship. R. Akiva put himself to the trouble of erecting a sukkah on the ship's bow. The next day, a wind blew and ripped it away. Rabban Gamaliel said to him, "Akiva, now where is your sukkah?"[6]

Seas and Rivers

95. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: At the time the Holy One was about to create the world, He said to the prince of the sea, "Open your mouth and swallow all the water in the world."[7] The prince of the sea replied, "Master of the universe, I have all I can do to put up with the water that already belongs to me." At once, God kicked and slew him: "He struck the sea with His power, and through His understanding smote Rahab" (Job 26:12). From this verse, said R. Isaac, it follows that the name of the prince of the sea was Rahab. Incidentally, had the waters not covered him, no creature could have endured the foul odor that his carcass emitted.[8]

96. When the word went forth from the mouth of the Almighty, "Let the waters . . . be gathered together" (Gen. 1:9), the mountains and the hills rose up from the uttermost parts of the earth and were scattered over the whole earth, so that many valleys were formed in the earth's surface, and the waters rolled down and were gathered into the valleys. The waters immediately lifted themselves up and rose to cover the earth as in the beginning. But the Holy One rebuked them, subdued them beneath the soles of His feet, and measured out their extent with His span, so that they should neither enlarge nor diminish. As a man makes a hedge for his vineyard, so He made the sand into a hedge for the sea. Thus, when the waters rise and see the sand before them, they turn back.[9]

97. "Like the raging sea" (Isa. 57:20). One wave says, "When I rise up, I will overwhelm the entire world, all of it." But when that wave reaches the sand, it submits to it. Still, the next wave learns nothing from the first.[10]

98. "The fountain of God is full of water" (Ps. 65:10). A certain heretic asked R. Meir, "Is it possible that 'the fountain of God remained full of water' [ibid.] and has not diminished at all since the six days of Creation? Such a thing is incredible!"[11] R. Meir replied, "Go in and bathe, and weigh yourself before you enter and after." The heretic went and weighed himself, and his weight had not diminished at all. R. Meir asked him, "All that perspiration—did it not ooze out of you?" The heretic: "Yes." R. Meir: "If your fountain—though you are but flesh and blood—has in no way diminished [by losing sweat], how much less by far should this be true of the fountain of the Holy One!"[12]

99. It happened that Hadrian Caesar sought to fathom the depth of the Adriatic Sea. He took ropes and kept lowering them for three and a half years, until he heard a heavenly voice say, "Cease and desist, Hadrian!"

Again, Hadrian Caesar sought to know how the waters praise the Holy One, so he made chests of glass, into which he put men, and then lowered the chests into the Great [Mediterranean] Sea. When the men came up, they said: We have heard the waters of the Great Sea praise the Holy One thus: "The Lord on high is mighty" (Ps. 93:4).[13]

100. "All the rivers run into the sea, yet the sea is not full" (Eccles. 1:7). There is the story of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua, who were sailing in the Great Sea, and their ship entered an area where the water was becalmed. R. Eliezer said to R. Joshua, "We have been brought here for no purpose other than [to prove that what Ecclesiastes says about the waters of the sea is true]." So they filled a cask to the brim with that water. When they arrived in Rome, Hadrian asked them, "What is distinctive about the water of the Great Sea?" They replied, "Its water absorbs other water." He said, "Let me have some of this water." They gave him a flaskful, and though more water was poured into it, the flask kept absorbing it.[1]

101. "The rivers have lifted up dokhyam"[2] (Ps. 93:3). R. Levi said: The waters were whispering to one another, asking, "Where shall we go?" and answering, "To the sea [derekh yam]! To the sea!" However, according to the sages, the waters said, "We are being crushed [dakkim], receive us! We are being reduced to submission [medukkakim], receive us!"[3]

102. All rivers are useful when flowing over land—blessed by sweetness, so that the world derives benefit from them. But once they flow into the sea, they become useless—cursed by bitterness, so that the world has no benefit from them.[4]

103. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: All rivers are lower in altitude than the three [Pishon, Gihon, and Hiddekel (Tigris)], and these three are lower in altitude than the Euphrates.[5]

What is the etymology of Hiddekel? R. Ashi said: Its waters are pungent [had] and swift [kal]. What is the etymology of Euphrates [Perat]? Its waters are fruitful [porim] and ever more abundant.[6]

104. R. Hiyya said: When a man goes up to the summit of Carmel and espies a kind of sieve in the Sea of Tiberias, that is Miriam's well.[7]

105. The Jordan issues from the cavern of Panias, flows through the lake of Sibkay,[8] the lake of Tiberias, and the lake of Sodom, and goes on until it falls into the Great [Mediterranean] Sea. Then it rolls on and on downward until it reaches Leviathan's mouth.[9]

106. The Jordan traverses the Sea of Tiberias but does not mingle with it.[10]

107. "The gathering together of the waters called He seas" (Gen. 1:10). R. Yose bar Halafta said: Since there is only one [Mediterranean] Sea, why does Scripture speak of seas? Well, the taste of fish caught in Acco is not like the taste of fish caught in Tyre; nor is the fish caught in Tyre like the fish caught in Apamea.[11]

108. There is a spring that nurtures strong men and a spring that nurtures weak men; a spring that nurtures handsome men and a spring that nurtures homely men; a spring that nurtures chaste men and a spring that nurtures men steeped in lewdness. Now, the spring of Shittim was one of harlotry, for it was the one that watered the land of Sodom. Therefore, Israel became depraved at that spring, as Scripture says, "When Israel abode in Shittim, the people began to commit harlotry with the daughters of Moab" (Num. 25:1). The Holy One will dry up that spring, as is said, "A spring shall come forth out of the house of the Lord, and shall water the riverbed of Shittim" (Joel 4:18).[12]

109. Samuel said: A river is replenished by the water coming down its [banks from the river's source],[13] thus disagreeing with Rav, for R. Ammi said in the name of Rav: When there is rain in the west [the Land of Israel], the Euphrates is a convincing witness of it.[14]

110. "He giveth a way in the sea" (Isa. 43:16). R. Isaac bar Maryon said: But that "He giveth a way in the sea," a man would perish at once whenever he ventured down into it.

The sages said: "He giveth a way in the sea" between Pentecost and the Feast of Tabernacles, "and a path in the mighty waters" (ibid.) between the Feast of Tabernacles and Hanukkah.

R. Nathan Kohen the brother of R. Hiyya bar Abba, about to set out on a sea voyage that was to last from the Feast of Tabernacles to Hanukkah, said to his brother, "Pray for me." The brother replied, "How can I pray for you? Rather, after tying up your lulav cluster [on Tabernacles], you should tie up your feet and not travel.[15] [Besides], when you enter a synagogue and hear [the congregation] praying for rain, do not rely upon my prayer in your behalf."[16]

R. Joshua son of R. Tanhum son of R. Hiyya of Kefar Hanun was in Esya[17] and wished to embark on a sea journey that would last from the Feast of Tabernacles to Hanukkah, but a [Roman] noblewoman cautioned him: "Should one set out on a sea voyage at this time of the year?" Moreover, his father appeared to him in a dream [and warned him]: "My son, [you will die] without burial: 'not to be accorded a burial' " (Eccles. 6:3). But R. Joshua paid no heed either to the words of his father or to the words of the noblewoman, and the warning was fulfilled [he was drowned].[18]

111. Rabban Gamaliel and R. Joshua once traveled on a ship. R. Gamaliel had only bread, while R. Joshua had both bread and fine flour. When R. Gamaliel's bread was used up, he had to depend on R. Joshua's flour. So R. Gamaliel asked R. Joshua, "Was it because you knew that

112. A large ship was once sailing on the Great [Mediterranean] Sea when a gale seized it and drove it to a place where the water was becalmed. When the passengers saw that they were in real trouble, they said, "Come, let us share our provisions, so that if we die, we all die, and if we survive, we will all survive." [As a reward], He who is everywhere gave light to their eyes [enabling them to devise a plan]. They took a kid, roasted it, and hung it up on the ship's western side. A large sea beast, attracted by the odor, came up and began to pull the ship until it drew it to where the water was flowing, and they were able to resume their voyage. When they reached their destination and entered Rome, they recounted the incident to R. Eliezer and R. Joshua, who applied to them the text "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days" (Eccles. 11:1).[2]

113. A valiant captain had a ship in which he prevailed over both waters and winds. When pirates came against him, he rose up and slew them all. After a while, just as he reached the entrance to a port, a violent wind came, and his ship broke apart. He began beseeching mercy of the people [on shore]: "I beg of you, save me." They replied, "Yesterday you prevailed over winds and slew pirates, and now you ask others to save you?" He said, "As long as my ship was in existence, I was valiant and did not need to have people help me. But now that my ship has broken apart, my strength, too, is broken."[3]

Gold and Precious Stones

114. There were three special ports, two belonging to the Romans and one belonging to the Persians. At the Roman ports they brought up coral; at the Persian port they brought up pearls. How did they go about it? They would bring six thousand men to a large Liburnian ship for twelve months, and the men loaded it with sand until it rested on the sea bottom. Than a diver would go down and tie flaxen ropes from the coral to the ship. The sand was then taken and thrown overboard, and, as the boat rose, it pulled up the coral with it.[4]

115. There are seven kinds of gold: good gold, pure gold, locked gold, brilliant gold, refined gold, spun gold, and Parvaim gold. Good gold is literally—as R. Isaac put it—"good for him who has it in his house and good for him whose escort it is." Pure gold is so pure that, when put into [furnace] fire, its weight is not diminished,[5] even as we have been taught: It is related that the golden lampstand Moses made in the wilderness was overweight by one gold denar, and though it was put into a furnace eighty times, its weight was not diminished. Locked gold is so called because when it becomes available, all other shops are locked [since no one will buy their inferior gold]. Brilliant gold is as brilliant as fire kindled by sulfur. Refined gold is cut up into pieces the size of olives, covered with dough, and fed to ostriches, which filter it; some say it is buried in manure for seven years. Spun gold is drawn out like wax and spun like thread. Hadrian had an egg's weight of it, Diocletian had a Gordian denar's weight of it. Parvaim gold is as red as the blood of bullocks [parim].[6]

116. "And the gold of that land is good [everywhere]" (Gen. 2:12). R. Abbahu said: The Holy One bestowed a great boon upon His world, for a man may change just one gold denar and make use of it for ever so many purposes.[7]

117. There is the story of a man who went to Rome to sell a sapphire. A would-be purchaser said to him, "I will buy it provided that I may first test it." He laid the sapphire on an anvil and began to strike it with a hammer—the anvil split and the hammer was smashed, but the sapphire remained intact.[8]

Grasses and Trees

118. R. Simon said: There is not one herb without its own constellation (mazzal) in heaven, which slaps it and says, "Grow!"[9]

119. R. Hanina ben Pazzi said: Thorns need not be hoed nor sown—they sprout on their own, rise straight up, and grow. But wheat—how much pain, how much labor is needed before it can be made to grow![10]

120. There is a story of an old man who was a guest in a certain place at the home of a pious man, and great deference was shown him. At noon, the householder's wife asked her husband, "My lord, what shall we eat tonight in our guest's honor?" He replied, "Our own adam." When the old man heard this, he was greatly disturbed, as he said to himself: It appears that in this place the people eat one another; and even as they are about to eat a man in my honor, it may be that when another guest comes after me, they will eat me in his honor. What did the old man do? He left that house and went off to another. At mealtime, the first householder went around and asked all his neighbors, "Have you seen the old man who came to my house today?" One replied, "I saw him enter the house of So-and-so." The householder went there and found the old man seated at the table. So he asked him, "Sir, what

Though the householder besought him again and a third time, he would not go, so the householder went away. Then the second householder asked the old man: "Why did you act that way, shaming that pious man?" The old man replied, "I heard such-and-such, and out of fear fled and came here." The householder burst into laughter and said to the old man, "In our area, adam is a kind of vegetable, so called because it resembles a human being."[1]

121. There is the story of two men walking on a road, one sighted and the other blind. When they sat down to eat, they reached out for the [edible] grasses in the field, and ate them. As a result, he who was sighted became blind, and he who was blind regained his sight. By the time they moved from that place, the first had to lean on the second, who until then had been leaning on him.[2]

122. There is the story of a certain man who was on his way from Babylonia to the Land of Israel and sat down at the side of the road to eat. He noticed two birds fighting with each other, until one killed the other. The victor then went and fetched an herb; it placed it in the mouth of the dead bird and brought it back to life. So the man took the herb, which had fallen from the bird, and set out to bring the dead of the Land of Israel back to life. When he arrived at the Ladder of Tyre, he saw a dead lion cast on the road. So, saying to himself: It would be a good idea to try the herb on this lion, he placed the herb in the lion's mouth and brought it back to life. Immediately, the lion leaped up and devoured the man. This bears out the popular saying: "Don't be kind to the bad, and you won't be had."[3]

123. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Yohanan: What is meant by "These are the sons of Seir the Horite, the inhabitants of the earth" (Gen. 36:20)? Could the verse possibly suggest that other human beings are inhabitants of the firmament? On the contrary, what the verse intimates is that they were expert in that which makes the earth habitable. They used to say, "This square rod of land is fit for olives, that square rod for vines, and the other for figs." The word Horite means that they smelled (merihin) the soil, and the word Hivite (Gen. 36:2), R. Papa said, means that they tasted the soil in the manner of a snake (hivya).[4]

124. We have been taught that Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said: Gallnut oak trees mark hilly terrain; palm trees mark valleys; reeds mark riverbeds; sycamores mark lowlands.[5]

125. R. Judah said: When a man goes out to the country in the month of Nisan [springtime] and sees trees bring forth blossoms, he is to say, "Blessed be He who has His world lack nothing, having created in it comely creatures and beautiful trees, so that human beings may enjoy them."[6]

126. R. Yannai said: The way it is with mankind, when a man buys a pound of meat in the marketplace, how much he wearies himself, how much trouble he goes to in order to cook it! Yet, while mortals are asleep in their beds, the Holy One causes winds to blow, clouds to rise, rains to come down, dews to bespangle plants, plants to spring up, fruits to grow plump.[7]

127. There is a tree whose roots go down twenty cubits, another whose roots go down thirty, and still another, fifty, while there are some trees whose roots go down no more than three handbreadths. If the rain coming down from above were to water only the trees whose roots go down three handbreadths, those whose roots go down fifty cubits would wither; on the other hand, if the rain watered the trees whose roots go down fifty cubits, then those that go down three handbreadths would be flooded. Hence, the deep above calls unto the deep below, saying, "Rise up, and I will come down," and the deep below replies, "Come down, and I will rise up." Thus, the deep above comes down and waters the trees whose roots go down three handbreadths, while the deep below rises up and waters the trees whose roots go down fifty cubits.

Pause and consider how vast is the distance between the deep above and the deep below, yet they call across it one to the other. And human beings in between the two do not hear their call. Is this not a proof that "God thundereth marvelously with His voice" (Job 37:5)?[8]

128. Roots of wheat penetrate fifty cubits into the soil. Roots of the fig tree are frail, yet they penetrate a flinty rock.[9]

129. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said: The earth drinks no deeper than its upper layer. If so, how do roots of the carob and the roots of the sycamore tree manage? Well, each tree gets rain to the depth it requires. R. Levi said to R. Eleazar: It is as you say—no deeper than the earth's upper layer. As for the carob tree and sycamore tree, once every thirty days the deep rises and irrigates them.[10]

130. R. Samuel bar Nahman said in the name of R. Jonathan: There are twenty-four kinds of sturdy trees, and the best are seven—those mentioned in the verse "I will plant cedars in the wilderness, acacias and myrtles and oleasters; I will set cypresses in the desert, box trees and elms as well" (Isa. 41:19).[11]

131. R. Huna said: All creatures seek their mate. R. Ammi said: Even cedars seek their mate. You can see this for yourself. For in Babylon there had been no cedars,[1] and when Nebuchadnezzar came here [to the Land of Israel], he uprooted cedars from here and planted them in Babylon. When he died, the cedars here rejoiced[2] at his downfall. It was of their rejoicing that Scripture said to Nebuchadnezzar, "Even pines rejoice at thy downfall, and [it goes without saying] the cedars of Lebanon" (Isa. 14:8).[3]

132. R. Tanhuma said: It happened that a female palm that stood in Hammetan yielded no fruit. A scion of a male palm was grafted onto it, but it still yielded no fruit. A palm grower who passed by saw it and said, "She gazes upon a palm at Jericho and has a desire for it." When they went and got a scion of that palm and grafted it onto the female, she yielded fruit right away.[4]

133. The male palm has neither hollows nor knots, and it casts a long shadow.

In the female palm, nothing goes to waste—its dates are eaten, its fronds are used during the Hallel, and its twigs are used to cover the sukkah: its bast is for ropes, its leaves for sieves, and its planed trunks for ceiling a house.[5]

134. R. Yohanan said: Once [on the Day of Atonement] I was seized by a ravenous hunger, so I ran to the eastern side of a fig tree, thus making true for myself "Wisdom revives the life of him who hath it" (Eccles. 7:12). For R. Joseph taught: One who would savor a fig's full taste should turn to the tree's eastern side, as is said, "The most precious things are the fruits of the sun" (Deut 33:14).[6]

135. When a broom shrub is set on fire, it makes coals that cannot be extinguished.

Once it happened that two men who were going through the wilderness sat down under a broom shrub, gathered some fallen twigs of the broom, cooked themselves a meal, and ate it. A year later, they came back to the same place, found the ashes of the fire they had kindled, and said, "It is now twelve months since we came through here and ate in this place." As they scrabbled the ashes and walked over them, their feet were burned by the live coals [still glowing] under the ashes.[7]

136. "Coals of broom" (Ps. 120:4). All other coals, when extinguished on the outside, are also extinguished inside. But coals of broom, even when extinguished on the outside, continue to burn within.

It once happened that a man left such coals burning on the Festival of Tabernacles, and when he came back on Passover, he found that they were still burning.

It once happened that a broom tree was set on fire, and it kept burning for eighteen months[8]—winter, summer, and another winter.[9]

137. "A tree that may be eaten" (Lev. 19:23)—that is, a tree whose wood and whose fruit taste the same. What is it? The pepper plant.[10]

138. When a tree that bears fruit is cut down, its moan goes from one end of the world to the other, yet no sound is heard.[11]

Various Kinds of Creatures

139. R. Akiva used to quote, "What variety thou hast created, O Lord!" (Ps. 104:24). You have creatures that grow in the sea, and You have creatures that grow on dry land. If those of the sea were to come up on the dry land, they would immediately die; and if those of the dry land were to go down into the sea, they too would immediately die. You have creatures that grow in fire,[12] and You have creatures that grow in the air. If those of the fire were to come up into the air, they would immediately die. If those of the air were to come down into the fire, they too would immediately die. "What variety Thou hast created, O Lord!"[13]

140. Our masters taught: Everything that exists on dry land exists also in the sea, except the weasel.[14]

141. Resh Lakish said: What is meant by the verse "I will sing unto the Lord, for He is highly exalted" (Exod. 15:1)? It means a song to Him who is exalted above the exalted ones. For a master taught: The king of wild beasts is the lion; the king of cattle is the ox; the king of birds is the eagle—but man is exalted over them. However, the Holy One is exalted over all these and over the entire world, all of it.[15]

142. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: There are three insolent ones: Israel among the nations, the dog among beasts, and the cock among fowls. Some say, also the goat among small cattle. And some say, also the caper shrub among trees.[16]

143. Our masters taught: There are three who gather strength as they get older: a fish, a snake, and a pig.[17]

144. R. Yohanan said: The best of cattle is the ox; the best of fowls is the chicken.[1]

145. R. Joshua ben Levi said: An unclean animal can never be impregnated by a clean one, nor can a clean animal be impregnated by an unclean one. Large cattle can never be impregnated by small cattle, nor small cattle by large cattle. Domestic animals can never be impregnated by wild beasts, nor can wild beasts be impregnated by domestic animals. The one exception [is the koi],[2] discussed by R. Eliezer and his disputants, who agree that this wild beast can be impregnated by a domestic animal.[3]

146. Our masters taught: An unclean fish gives birth to live young, while a clean fish lays eggs. Whatever gives birth to live young gives suck [that is, has breasts]. Whatever lays eggs supports its young by gathering food for them. The one exception is the bat, for though it lays eggs, it gives suck to its young. Dolphins multiply and increase by coupling like human beings. What are dolphins? R. Judah said: Humans of the sea.

Whatever animal has its male genital outside gives birth; and whatever has its male genital inside lays eggs. Whatever copulates during the day gives birth in the day; and whatever copulates during the night gives birth in the night. Whatever copulates during the day as well as the night gives birth in the day as well as the night. Whatever copulates during the day gives birth in the day—the hen. Whatever copulates during the night gives birth in the night—the bat. Whatever copulates during the day as well as the night gives birth in the day as well as the night—man and all creatures resembling him.

All animals whose [manner of] copulating and [length of] pregnancy are alike can give birth from one another and nurse each other's young.

All male animals copulate with their faces to the female's back, except three, which copulate face to face—fish, man, and serpents. The sages taught: Camels copulate back to back.

Our masters taught: The hen lays its eggs twenty-one days after impregnation, and its counterpart among trees is the almond.[4] The dog carries its young fifty days [after impregnation], and its counterpart among trees is the fig. The cat carries its young fifty-two days [after impregnation], and its counterpart among trees is the mulberry. The pig carries its young sixty days [after impregnation], and its counterpart among trees is the apple. The fox and all kinds of varmint carry their young six months, and their counterpart among trees is field produce [wheat].[5] Small animals that are clean carry their young five months, and their counterpart among trees is the vine. Large animals that are unclean carry their young twelve months, and their counterpart among trees is the date palm. Large animals that are clean carry their young nine months, and their counterpart among trees is the olive. The wolf, the lion, the bear, the leopard, the bardeles [panther?], the elephant, the tailless ape, and the long-tailed ape carry their young three years, and their counterpart among trees is the fig tree that grows white figs. The viper carries its young seventy years, and its counterpart among trees is the carob, for it takes seventy years from the time the carob is planted to the time its fruit ripens; the time of its "pregnancy,"[6] which lasts three years, [is included in the seventy years of the carob's growth]. The serpent carries its young seven years, and for that creature we can find no counterpart tree. Some say its counterpart is a species of fig tree bearing inferior figs.[7]

147. A certain philosopher wanted to know how long after impregnation a serpent gives birth. So when he saw a pair of serpents copulating, he took them, placed them in a cask, and fed them until they bore young. When the sages visited Rome, the philosopher asked Rabban Gamaliel how long after impregnation it takes a serpent to bear. Since Rabban Gamaliel did not know what to answer, he turned pale [with shame]. R. Joshua met him and, seeing that his face was pale, asked him, "Why is your face so pale?" Rabban Gamaliel: "I was asked a question and could not answer it." R. Joshua: "What was the question?" Rabban Gamaliel: "How long after impregnation does a serpent bear?" R. Joshua: "After seven years." Rabban Gamaliel: "How do you know that?" R. Joshua: "Because the dog, which is an unclean beast, bears after fifty days, and cattle, also unclean, bear after twelve months. Now, the serpent was told, 'Cursed art thou above all cattle, and [they] above all beasts of the field' [Gen. 3:14]: hence, just as cattle are seven times more accursed than a beast of the field, so is the serpent seven times more accursed than cattle." Toward evening, Rabban [Gamaliel] went and told this to the philosopher, who proceeded to beat his head against the wall [in grief] as he cried out, "All that took me seven years to achieve, this man handed to me on the tip of a reed!"[8]

148. We have been taught: After seven years, the male tzavua [hyena] turns into a bat; after seven years, the bat turns into an arpad [another small bat]; after seven years, the arpad turns into a kimosh [a thorny weed]; after seven years, the kimosh turns into a thorn; after seven years, the thorn turns into a demon [shed]. After seven years, a man's spine [sheder] turns into a serpent.[9]

149. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: In all my days I have never seen a lion work as a porter, a deer as a gatherer of fruit, a fox as a shopkeeper,

Fowl

151. When the hen's chicks are tiny, she gathers them under her wings, warms them, and grubs for them. But when they grow up and one of them wants to get near her, she pecks at its head and says, "Go grub in your own dungheap."[3]

152. R. Simeon ben Halafta had a hen that lost her femur. So they provided her with a tube of reed for support, and she recovered.

It is said of R. Simeon ben Halafta, who was an observer of nature, that he did something to disprove R. Judah's view, for R. Judah maintained, "If a bird's down is gone, it is unfit to be eaten." Now, R. Simeon ben Halafta had a hen whose down was entirely gone. So, after first wrapping the hen in a bronze workers' [warm] leather apron, he kept her in an oven, and the new down she grew was more abundant than before.[4]

153. "On eagles' wings" (Exod. 19:4). All other birds carry their young between their legs for fear of other birds flying above them. But the eagle is afraid only of man, who might shoot an arrow at him. So the eagle says, "It is better that the arrow lodge in me than in my young."[5]

154. An eagle does not enter its nest at once, but first claps its wings between one tree and the next, between one thicket and the next, so that its eaglets wake up and have the strength to receive it.[6]

155. R. Simeon ben Halafta was an observer of nature. Now, in his orchard he had a tree trunk, and he saw a hoopoe building its nest in it. So, saying to himself: What business does this unclean bird have in my orchard? R. Simeon ben Halafta proceeded to demolish the nest. The hoopoe went and repaired it. What did R. Simeon ben Halfta do then? He brought a board, placed it at the opening of the nest, and made it stay put by driving a nail into it. What did the hoopoe do? It brought a certain herb, placed it on the nail, and pulled it out. R. Simeon ben Halafta decided: It would be a good idea if I were to hide this herb, so that thieves may not learn to do likewise and bring mankind to ruin.[7]

156. "Oh that I had wings like a dove!" (Ps. 55:7). R. Azariah said in the name of R. Yudan: All other birds, when tired, rest on a rock or a tree, but the dove, when she gets tired while flying, draws in one of her wings[8] and keeps flying with the other.[9]

157. A dove fleeing from a hawk was about to enter a cleft in a rock when she found a serpent nesting there. If she entered, there was the serpent hissing at her; if she turned back, there was the hawk standing outside. What did the dove do? She began to cry and clap her wings, so that the devecote's owner would hear her and come to save her.[10]

158. The sages said: The raven is cruel—when he begets fledglings and sees that they are white while he is black, he abandons them and goes away. Then the Holy One provides sustenance for them.

R. Assi was an observer of nature. When he once saw a raven building its nest, laying eggs, and hatching fledglings, he took the fledglings and put them in a new pot, whose top he sealed with plaster. After three days, he opened the top to find out what the fledglings were doing and found that their droppings had produced gnats, which the fledglings ate as they flew up. R. Assi applied to them the verse "Who provideth for the raven his prey" (Job 38:41).[11]

159. In the days of R. Hiyya the Elder, a starling migrated to the Land of Israel. The people came and brought it to him, inquiring, "May we eat it?" He replied, "Go and place it on a rooftop, and any bird that comes to rest next to it is of its kind." So they went and placed it on a rooftop, and an Egyptian raven came by and rested next to it. Accordingly, R. Hiyya said, "The starling is unclean, because it belongs to the species of the raven, which Scripture prohibits by saying, 'Every raven after its kind' " (Lev. 11:16). Hence the proverb: "Not for nothing did the starling go to the raven—it is, after all, its kind."[12]

160. The partridge brings eggs of other birds and sits on them, until they emerge from their shells as chicks. They then climb on his back, pluck his feathers, and eat them. When the partridge wishes to flee from them, he cannot, because his feathers have been plucked. Then, when a reptile or a beast come upon him, it eats him. What brought such a fate upon him? The fact that he brooded on eggs that were not his.[13]

161. R. Ilish was taken captive, together with a man who understood the language of birds. When a raven came by and crowed, R. Ilish asked the man, "What does it say?" The man replied, "It says, 'Ilish, flee! Ilish, flee.' " So R. Ilish said, "The raven is a liar, and one should not rely on it." Then a dove came along and called. R. Ilish again asked the man, "What does it say?" The man replied, "Ilish, flee! Ilish, flee!' " [Said R. Ilish], "Since the congregation of Israel is likened to a dove, I am being told that a miracle will be wrought for me." So both men made a break for it. A miracle was performed for R. Ilish and he got safely across the bridge [on the river], but the man with R. Ilish was caught and put to death.[1]

162. R. Judah said, The hasidah (Lev. 11:19) is a white stork. Why is it called hasidah? Because it does kindness (hasidut) to its mates.[2]

163. R. Judah also said: The kaat (Lev. 19:18) is a pelican. The raham (ibid.) [is a pelican that] cries, Sherakrak."[3] Why is it called raham? Because when it appears, rahamim, "compassion," appears in the world; provided, said R. Bebai bar Abbaye, it is perched on something when it cries, Sherakrak." We have a tradition that if a pelican perches on the ground and cries, "Sherakrak," the Messiah will come presently, in keeping with "I will sherakrak[4] to them, and I will gather them" (Zech. 10:8).

But did not a raham once settle on a furrow, and when it cried "Sherakrak," a piece of marble fell on it and split its head? That bird was an imposter [not a real raham].[5]

164. In cities far across the sea there is a bird called kerum,[6] and when the sun shines on it, it changes into ever so many colors.[7]

165. The tzavua, the colored animal,[8] has three hundred and sixty-five colors, corresponding to the days of the solar year.[9]

166. "I shall multiply my days as the hol, the phoenix" (Job 29:18). The school of R. Yannai maintained: The hol lives a thousand years, at the end of which a fire issues from its nest and burns it up, leaving only as much as an egg's bulk, and from that it grows new limbs and lives again. R. Yudan bar R. Simeon said: [It lives a thousand years], at the end of which its body is consumed and its wings drop off, yet, from the egg-sized bulk left, it grows new limbs and lives again.[10]

Reptiles and Creeping Things

167. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Of all that the Holy One created in His world, He did not create a single thing that is useless. Even those creatures you may look upon as superfluous in the world, such as serpents and scorpions, flies, fleas, or gnats—they too are part of the entirety of creation.[11]

168. "A serpent in the way" (Gen. 49:17). All other beasts go in pairs, whereas the serpent goes its way alone.[12]

169. "Dust shall be the serpent's food" (Isa. 65:25). R. Ammi and R. Assi differed. One said: Even when the serpent eats any of the world's delicacies, he tastes in them only the taste of dust. And the other said: Even if he eats any of the world's delicacies, he is not content until he eats dust.[13]

170. R. Safra said in the name of R. Joshua of the South: A serpent's venom is of three kinds: When the serpent is young, it sinks to the bottom [of what the snake is drinking]. When in the middle years, it permeates [the liquid]. When old, it floats [on top].[14]

171. Our masters taught: The wilderness of Shur was eight hundred parasangs by eight hundred parasangs, and full of serpents, scorpions, and wild beasts. R. Yose said: In it were serpents as thick as the beams of an olive press, and scorpions the length of a span. Thus, as Scripture speaks of it: "Who led thee through the great and dreadful wilderness, wherein were serpents, fiery serpents, and scorpions" (Deut. 8:15). It is reported that when King Shapur wished to go through that wilderness, his first caravan, endeavoring to go through, was swallowed by a serpent; the next caravan was swallowed by the same serpent; and so was the third. As the king sat in great distress, the sages who were with him said, "Why are you putting up with this? Summon ten strong men," and he summoned them. Then they said, "Fill ten hides with straw."[15] They kept filling the hides with straw and rolling them before the serpent, while he continued swallowing the straw until his belly was so swollen that he could not move. Then they attacked and slew him.[16]

172. It is reported that when the viper merely glances at a flying bird's shadow, the bird, at once spellbound [by the viper's glance] at its shadow, falls to pieces limb by limb.[17]

called Baldhead. Why was he called Baldhead? Because, so it is said, he once went up to the top of a mountain to gather wood. There he saw a serpent the size of a beam in an olive press, sound asleep. And even though the serpent did not see him, the man's hair fell out, and no hair grew on him again to the day of his death. So he was called Baldhead.[1]

174. R. Phinehas told in the name of R. Hanan of Sephoris the story of a certain man who was reaping and binding sheaves in the valley of Beth-tofet. When the heat [of the day] came on, he took some herbs and made them into a wreath, which he tied to his head. Later, a big snake came to attack him, and he rose up and killed it. A snake charmer passed by, saw the dead snake, fixed his eyes on the man, and said, "I am amazed! Who slew this snake?" The man: "I slew it." When the snake charmer noticed the herbs made into a wreath on the man's head, he asked him, "Did you really kill this snake?" The man: "Yes." The snake charmer: "Would you mind removing the herbal [wreath] from your head?" The man: "Not at all." The charmer: "Would you mind picking up the snake with my staff?" The man: "Not at all." But as soon as the man drew near to the snake, even before he touched it, he fell to pieces limb by limb.[2]

175. Once, a man was walking in a field, holding a jug of milk in his hand. A snake moaning with thirst met him. "Why are you moaning?" asked the man. "Because I am thirsty," replied the snake; "what is that you have in your hand?" The man: "Milk." The snake: "Give me the milk to drink, and I will show you so much money that you will be rich." The man gave the milk to the snake, and it drank.

After the snake had drunk, the man said, "Show me the money you spoke of." The snake: "Follow me." He followed it until they came to a big stone. The snake said, "The money is hidden under this stone." The man lifted the stone, dug down, and found the money, which he took and was about to carry to his house.

But what did the snake do? It sprang up and coiled itself around the man's neck. "Why are you doing this?" the man asked. The snake: "I am going to kill you because you took all my money." The man: "Come with me to Solomon before his court."

They went and appeared before Solomon, the snake still coiled around the man's neck. The man made his plea to the king.

"What are you after?" the king asked the snake. It answered, "I want to kill him." "Get off his neck," said the king; "Since both of you are in court, it is not right that you should have a hold on him while he has no hold on you." So the snake slithered off the man's neck to the ground. The king: "Now you can have your say." The snake began his plea: "I wish to slay the man, in keeping with what the Holy One said to me: 'Thou shalt strike him in the heel' " (Gen. 3:15). Then the king said to the man, "And the Holy One commanded you, 'He is to strike you in the head' (ibid.)." The man immediately sprang forward and smashed its head.

Hence the proverb "Smash the head of even the best of snakes."[3]

176. "When a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh even his enemies eager to give up life for him" (Prov. 16:7). By "enemy" here, according to R. Joshua ben Levi, is meant a snake [as is proven by the following story].

A man ground up some garlic in his house [for his meal]. A desert snake came and ate of it, and a pet snake saw him. When the people of the house sat down to eat, the pet snake began to scatter dust at them, but they did not understand what it meant. So it threw itself into the [venom-soaked] garlic [and died].[4]

177. "Even the jackals draw out their breast, they give suck to their young ones" (Lam. 4:3). The wild ass spreads a kind of veil over its face when it suckles its young, in order not to see their red coloring and devour them.[5]

178. R. Muna bar Torta said: Once I went to a place where crossbreeding was practiced, and I saw a snake wrapped around a lizard. After some days, an arod emerged from between them. When I came [with this story] before R. Simeon the Pious, he said to me: The Holy One declares: These people have been bringing into being creatures that I did not create in My world; I too will bring upon them a [vastly more dangerous] creature that I did not create in My world.[6]

179. Our masters taught: In a certain place there was once an arod[7] who used to injure people. People came and told R. Hanina ben Dosa about this. He said, "Show me its hole." They did so, and he put his heel over the hole. The arod came out, bit him, and immediately died. He hoisted it on his shoulder, brought it to the house of study, and said, "See, my children, it is not the venomous lizard [arod] that kills, it is sin that kills!"

On that occasion, they said: Woe unto the man who meets up with a venomous lizard, and woe unto the venomous lizard who meets up with R. Hanina ben Dosa.[8]

180. When a havarbar lizard stings a man, if the man is the first to get to water, the lizard will die; but if the lizard is the first to get to water, the man will die.

It is told that while R. Hanina ben Dosa was standing for the Tefillah, a havarbar lizard came and stung him, but he did not interrupt his Tefillah. Then they went and found that lizard dead at the entrance to his hole. When R. Hanina's disciples asked him, "Master, did you not feel the sting?" he replied, "May such-and-such come

R. Isaac bar Eleazar said: [To save R. Hanina's life], the Holy One created a kind of fountain under his feet, in keeping with "He will fulfill the desire of them that fear Him; He also will hear their cry, and will save them" (Ps. 145:19).[1]

181. The Holy One carries out a mission of His through everything, even through a snake, even through a scorpion, even through a frog, even through a gnat.

R. Hanan of Sepphoris said: There is the story of a scorpion proceeding to the other side of the Jordan to carry out a mission given him. The Holy One provided him with a frog, upon whose back he crossed the river; then, moving on, he stung a man to death. His mission thus completed, the scorpion was brought back to his place by the frog.[2]

182. As R. Yannai was sitting and lecturing at the gate of his town, he saw a snake slithering rapidly toward the town. When it was chased away from one side [of the road], it resumed its journey on the other side; when chased away from that side, it kept going forward on the side where it had been first. So R. Yannai said, "This creature is on its way to carry out a mission." Soon after, a report spread in the town: "So-and-so was bitten by a snake and is dead."[3]

183. Samuel saw a scorpion mount a frog, cross a river, and bite a man, who then died. Accordingly, he applied to the frog and the scorpion the verse "They stand this day [to carry out] Thy judgments, for all are Thy servants" (Ps. 119:91).[4]

184. It is reported of King David that when he finished the book of Psalms, he became so arrogant that he said to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, is there anyone in the world who has uttered as many songs as I?" In that instant, a frog confronted him and said, "Do not be so arrogant—I utter more songs than you."[5]

185. Three creatures—the ishut (mole), the snake, and the frog—differ from all other creatures. The mole: if it could see light, no creature could stand up against it. The snake: if it had feet, it could overtake a horse in full stride and kill him. The frog: if it had teeth, no creature would enter the water for fear of it.[6]

186. What is an ishut? R. Judah said: It is a creature that has no eyes. Accordingly, the ishut must be a mole rat. Though there is no proof for this identification, there is an intimation of it in the verse "Let them be as a snail which melteth and passeth away, like an untimely birth or like an eshet,[7] that hath not seen the sun" (Ps. 58:9).[8]

187. Moles do not see the sun, but burrow into the earth and remain there.[9]

188. There are creatures that grow in fire but cannot grow in the air. What is one? The salamander. How does it come into being? When makers of glass heat their furnace seven successive days and seven successive nights, there emerges from the fierceness of the fire a creature resembling a mouse, which people call "salamander." If a man applies its blood to his hand or to any of his limbs, fire has no power over that spot. Why not? Because the salamander's origin is from fire.[10]

189. R. Eleazar was asked by his disciples: Why do all people persecute mice? Because of their malicious nature. In what way does it show itself? Rava said: They chew up even clothing.[11] R. Papa said: They will chew up even the handle of a mattock.[12]

190. Mice are feral [and want to devour everything before their eyes]. So when they see a great deal of produce, they call their comrades to help them eat.[13]

191. There is the story of a king of Saracenia who happened to drop a pearl. A mouse [scampered by and] swallowed it. So the king came to R. Phinehas ben Yair, who asked him, "Am I a magician?" The king: "I came because of your good name." So R. Phinehas commanded all mice to gather around him. When he saw one of them come waddling in, he said, "Here, the pearl is in this one." Then he commanded the mouse to disgorge, and it spewed out the pearl.[14]

192. Go out into a valley, and you will see a mouse that today is half-flesh and half-earth, and tomorrow it will have become a reptile, so that all of it will be flesh.

Go up a mountain, and you will see that today there is only one snail, but tomorrow, after rain comes down, the whole mountain will be filled with snails.[15]

193. R. Yose said: Once, while I was on a journey from Chezib to Tyre, I encountered an old man whom I greeted and asked, "How do you make your living?" The old man replied, "From purple snail."[16] I asked: "But can it be found?" He replied, "By Heaven, there is an area in the sea where the creature lies between mountains. Spiders sting it, and when it dies, it dissolves in its place." I said,

"By Heaven, they do say that it is kept for the righteous in the time-to-come."[1]

194. Our masters taught: The purple snail resembles the sea in its essence: its shape resembles a fish; it comes up from the sea once in seventy years; and the blue thread is dyed with its blood. It is for this reason that it is so expensive.[2]

195. The snail—all the time it is growing, its shell grows with it.[3]

196. It is said of R. Simeon ben Halafta that he was an experimenter with natural phenomena.

In what way did he experiment? R. Mesharsheya gave an example: Scripture admonishes:

> Look to the ant, thou sluggard;
> Consider her ways, and be wise,
> Which having no chief, overseer, or ruler,
> Provideth her bread in the summer
> (Prov. 6:6–8).

R. Simeon said: I will go and see whether it is true that ants have no king. So, during the summer solstice,[4] he went and spread his cloak over an anthill. When one came out, he put a mark on it. It went in and reported to the others, "A shadow has fallen."[5] The instant the other ants came out, he lifted his cloak, and the sun beat down upon them. So they set on that ant and killed it. R. Simeon concluded: From this incident, one may infer that ants have no king. If they had a king, he reasoned, would they not have had to obtain royal sanction [to kill the ant]?

R. Aha son of Rava said to R. Ashi: But the king may have been with them, or the king's permission may have been given them [to act in an instance of deception]. Or perhaps it was an interregnum [when there was no authority], a time such as Scripture mentions: "In those days there was no king in Israel, every man did that which was right in his own eyes" (Judg. 28:25). But no; Solomon's testimony in Proverbs [quoted above] is good enough for us.[6]

197. The ant has three stories in her hill, but she brings no food into the top story because of the roof's drippings, nor into the bottom story because of the soil's moisture; only into the middle story. She lives only six months. Why so short a time? Because a creature that has neither sinews nor bones can live only six months. Though the entire amount of her food is only a grain and a half of wheat, yet throughout the summer she goes about gathering all the wheat, the barley, and the lentils she can find. R. Tanhuma said, "But why does she do so? Because she says, 'Perhaps the Holy One will decree a longer life for me, and then I will have what I need to eat.' "

R. Simeon ben Yohai said: It is told that three hundred kor of wheat were found in one ant hole, which a single ant had gathered that summer for the winter. Therefore Solomon said, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise" (Prov. 6:8).

What else is intimated in "Consider her ways, and be wise"? Consider her good conduct, how she avoids taking what belongs to others. Thus, according to R. Simeon ben Halafta's account, an ant once dropped a grain of wheat, and though all the other ants came and sniffed at it, not one of them touched it, until the ant to whom it belonged came and took it. Consider therefore the wisdom an ant has.[7]

198. How are ants' holes destroyed? R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: Earth is brought from one hole and placed in another hole, and the ants strangle one another.[8]

R. Yemar bar Shelemia said in the name of Abbaye: Such a measure is effective only if a river separates the two ant holes, with no bridge between them or no plank [on the river] between them or no rope to cross by. How far apart should the two holes be? At least a parasang.[9]

199. Once, while seated in his garden, David, king of Israel, saw a wasp eating a spider. David spoke up to the Holy One: Master of the universe, what benefit is there from these two You created in Your world? The wasp merely despoils the nectar of flowers—no benefit from it. The spider spins all year but makes no garments. The Holy One replied: David, you belittle My creatures! The time will come when you shall have need of both of them.

Later, while fleeing from King Saul, David took refuge in a cave, and the Holy One sent a spider, which spun a web across the cave's entrance, sealing it. When Saul came and saw the cave's entrance with the web across it, he said, "Surely no man has come in here, for had he done so, he would have torn the web." So Saul went away without going into the cave.

As David left the cave and saw the spider, he blew it a kiss, saying: Blessed be your Creator, and blessed be you.

Subsequently, David found Saul asleep within a barricade [in the royal tent], with Abner lying prone across the tent's entrances, his head in one entrance and his feet in the opposite entrance. Abner's knees were raised up, and so David was able to come in under them and pick up the cruse of water.[10] As he was about to leave the way he came, Abner stretched out his legs, which were like two gigantic columns in size, pinning David down. David, beseeching the Holy One's compassion, prayed, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" (Ps. 22:2). At that, the Holy One performed a miracle for him—He sent him a big wasp, which stung Abner's legs so that he again raised his knees, and thus David was free to leave.

In that instant, David said in praise of the Holy One:

Master of the universe, "who can imitate Your works, Your mighty acts?" (Deut. 3:24)—all Your works are beautiful![1]

Domesticated and Wild Animals

200. "His firstling bullock, majesty is his; and his horns are the horns of the re'em" (Deut. 33:17).

The bull: his strength is awesome, but his horns are not beautiful; on the other hand, the re'em: his horns are beautiful, but his strength is not awesome.[2]

201. Do not stand in front of a bull when he comes up from the meadow, because Satan dances between his horns.[3] Samuel said: This applies only to a black bull, and only in the month of Nisan.

R. Oshaia taught: One should keep fifty cubits away from a bull that has never gored; and completely out of sight of a bull known to be a gorer.

The sages taught in the name of R. Meir: [Even] when the bull's head is in a feed basket, climb to the upper chamber and push away the ladder from under you.[4]

202. Our masters taught: Rams used to be brought [as temple offerings] from Moab, lambs from Hebron, calves from the Sharon, and pigeons from King's Mountain. R. Judah said: They used to bring lambs that were as wide as they were tall.[5]

203. The sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: "The camel, because it cheweth the cud" (Lev. 11:4). The Ruler of His world knows that there are no creatures other than the camel [and the rock badger (Lev. 11:5)] that chew the cud and yet are unclean. Therefore, Scripture made a point of singling out the camel [as well as the rock badger] with the pronoun "it."

"And the swine because it parteth the hoof" (Lev. 11:7). The Ruler of His world knows that there is no creature other than the swine that has a parted hoof and yet is unclean. Therefore, Scripture made a point of singling out the swine with the pronoun "it."

R. Hisda said: If a man walks in the desert and finds an animal with its hooves cut off, he should examine its mouth: if it has no upper teeth, he may be certain that it is clean; if it has upper teeth, he may be certain that it is unclean—provided, however, he knows a young camel when he sees one.[6]

R. Hisda also said: If a man walks along a road and finds an animal whose mouth is toothless, he should examine its hooves: if its hooves are cloven, he may be certain that it is clean; if not, he may be certain that it is unclean—provided, however, he recognizes the swine.

R. Hisda also said: If a man walks in the desert and finds an animal whose mouth is toothless and whose hooves are cut off, he should examine its flesh: if it runs crosswise,[7] he may be certain that it is clean; if not, he may be certain that it is unclean—provided, however, he can recognize the wild ass.[8]

204. R. Hanan bar Rava said: The shesuah[9] (Deut. 14:7) is a specific creature that has two backs and two spines. But was Moses our teacher a hunter or an archer?[10] From here, one may draw a refutation of him who says, "Torah is not from Heaven."[11]

205. Six things are said of a horse: it loves promiscuity, it loves battle, its spirit is haughty, it despises sleep, it eats much but excretes little, and it walks at the sides of the road. Some say, it also wishes to slay [its master] in battle.[12]

206. How long is a horse's nap? Sixty breaths.[13]

207. A donkey is cold even during the summer solstice.[14]

208. Abbaye said: The mule: if its voice is harsh, it is the offspring of a she-ass; if shrill, the offspring of a mare. R. Papa said: If its ears are big and its tail short, it is the offspring of a she-ass; if its ears are small and its tail long, it is the offspring of a mare.[15]

209. "[On the Sabbath], ewes may not go out protected [hanunot] in a certain way" (Shab. 5:4). "Protected" here means, said R. Aha bar Ulla while seated before R. Hisda, that after a ewe is shorn, a compress saturated with oil is placed on her forehead, so that she will not catch cold. R. Hisda replied, "If so, you would treat a ewe as though she were Mar Ukba!"[16] But R. Papa bar Samuel, while seated before R. Nahman, said: "Protected" means that when a ewe is about to kneel for lambing, two compresses saturated with oil are made for her, one placed on her forehead, and the other over her womb, so that she may keep warm. R. Nahman replied, "If so, you would treat a ewe as though she were Yalta!"[17] Finally, to explain "protected," R. Huna said: There is a certain wood in cities far across the sea called hanun, a chip of which is brought and placed in the ewe's nostril to make her sneeze and thus expel the worms inside her head.[1]

210. R. Yose ben Nehorai said: There was a ewe in our neighborhood in whose windpipe there was a hole, and when a tube of reed was fitted into it, the ewe recovered.[2]

211. While alive, a sheep has but one voice. After it dies, its voice is multiplied sevenfold. How is its voice multiplied sevenfold? Its two horns are made into two trumpets; its two leg bones into two flutes; its hide into a drum; its entrails are used for lyres, and its chitterlings for harps.[3]

212. A koi is a wild ram. Some say: It is the offspring of a he-goat and a hind. R. Yose said: [It is not a hybrid but] a distinct creature. However, the sages have not decided whether it is a species of wild animal or a species of cattle. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: It is a species of cattle, and the family of Doshai used to breed many herds of them.[4]

213. R. Zera found R. Judah standing by the door of his father-in-law's house and noticed that he was in such a cheerful mood that if he asked him about all the secret processes of the universe, he would tell them to him. So he asked him: Why do the dark-colored goats walk at the head of the flock, while the [light-colored] sheep follow after? R. Judah: It is in keeping with the order of creation—darkness first and light afterward.

Why is the rear end of sheep covered with a fat-tail, while goats are uncovered? Those whose wool we cover ourselves with are themselves covered, while those whose fur we do not cover ourselves with are uncovered.

Why is a camel's tail short? Because it feeds on thorns.[5]

Why is an ox's tail long? Because it dwells in meadows and needs a long tail to beat off the gnats.

Why is the proboscis of a locust flexible? Because it dwells among swaying young shoots. If the proboscis were hard, it would be dislocated, and the locust would go blind. For, as Samuel said, if one wishes to blind a locust, let him extract its proboscis.

Why is a fowl's [lower] eyelid raised upward?[6] Because it dwells among the rafters, and if smoke entered its eyes, it would go blind.[7]

214. R. Hanina ben Dosa had some goats and was told, "Your goats are causing damage." He replied, "If they really cause damage, may bears devour them; if not, may each of them bring a bear impaled on its horns this evening." That evening, each of them brought home a bear on its horns.[8]

215. A story: The donkey of R. Hanina ben Dosa was stolen by brigands, who tied it up in a yard and put straw, barley, and water before it. But it would neither eat nor drink. So, saying, "Why should we let it die and stink up our yard?" they opened the gate and chased it out.

It walked along braying until it reached the house of R. Hanina ben Dosa. As soon as it reached the house, his son heard its voice. "Father," he said, "this sounds like our beast." R. Hanina said to him, "Son, open the gate, for it must be almost dead of hunger." The son rose up, opened the gate, and put straw, barley, and water before the donkey, which it ate and drank.

Therefore it is said: Even as the righteous of old were saintly, so their beasts, like their masters, were saintly.[9]

216. While on a journey, R. Phinehas ben Yair came to a certain inn, where some barley was placed before his she-ass, which she would not eat. It was mashed, but the she-ass would not eat it. It was carefully picked; still the she-ass would not eat it. "Perhaps," suggested R. Phinehas, "the barley had not been tithed?" So the barley was tithed, and only then did the she-ass eat it. R. Phinehas said, "This poor creature is on a journey to do the will of her Creator, and you would feed her untithed produce!"[10]

217. R. Yose of Yodkart had a donkey. When hired out for the day, the pay would be sent attached to the donkey's back, and he would bring it to his master [R. Yose]. If the amount was too much or too little, the donkey would not move from his place. Once, a pair of sandals were forgotten on the donkey['s back], and he refused to budge until they were removed.[11]

218. There is the story of a certain pious man who owned a plowing heifer. In the course of time, his wealth slipped out of his hand, and he had to sell her to a heathen. The new master plowed with her during the six [working] days of the week. On the Sabbath, he brought her out again to plow for him, but she lay down under the yoke and would not work. Though he kept beating her, she would not budge from her place. Seeing this, the heathen went to the pious man and said to him, "Come, take back your heifer. Six days I worked her, but when I took her out on the Sabbath, she lay down under the yoke and would do no work whatever. And though I beat her again and again, she would not budge from her place."

After the heathen spoke, the pious man understood why the heifer would do no work—it was because she had become accustomed to rest on the Sabbath. So he said to the heathen, "Come along, and I will get her up and make her plow." When he came to the heifer, he whispered into her ear "O heifer, heifer, you know that when you were in my domain, you were allowed to rest on the Sabbath. But since my sins brought it about that I had to sell you to this heathen, I beg of you, stand up and do the will of your [new] master."

At once the heifer stood up and was ready to work.

The heathen then said to the pious man, "I won't let you go until you tell me what you did to her and what you whispered in her ear. Perhaps you bewitched her."

The pious man replied, "I put it to her thus and so."

On hearing these words the heathen, shaken and amazed, reasoned with himself: If a heifer, which has neither speech nor knowledge nor understanding, could acknowledge her Creator, shall not I, whose Maker made me in His own image and likeness, and put knowledge and understanding into me—shall not I acknowledge my Creator?

At once he went off, became a proselyte, and was privileged to acquire so much Torah that he came to be called R. Yohanan ben Torta ("son of a heifer")[1]

219. R. Eleazar's pupils asked him, "Why does a cat not recognize its master the way a dog does?" He replied, "If a man who eats what a mouse has bitten into is forgetful,[2] all the more so by far the creature that eats the mouse itself."[3]

220. After herdsmen had milked a cow, a snake came and drank of the milk, and a dog saw it drinking. When the herdsmen sat down to partake of the milk, the dog began to bark [warningly] at them, but they did not understand what his barking meant. Finally, the dog sprang forward, drank of the [venom-spattered] milk, and died. When the herdsmen buried him, they set a monument over him, which to this day is called the Dog's Monument.[4]

221. A certain man invited a sage to his home and seated a dog next to him. When the sage asked his host, "Do I deserve such humiliation from you?" the host replied, "Master, I owe the dog much gratitude: slavers came into the city, and when one of them sought to rape my wife, the dog [saved her by springing on him and] biting off his testicles."[5]

222. R. Tanhum bar Maryon said: In Rome, there are dogs who know how to outwit people. Thus, a dog slumps down in a baker's shop and pretends he has dozed off. When the owner of the bakeshop also dozes off, the dog dislodges a few loaves to the ground. While the loaves are being gathered up, the dog makes off with a loaf and gets away.[6]

223. R. Jonah lectured at the entrance to the patriarch's academy: What is meant by "The Righteous One knoweth the cause of the poor" (Prov. 29:7)? The Holy One knows that a dog's food is scanty,[7] so He enables it to keep food in its stomach for three days.

R. Hamnuna said: This proves that it is proper to throw a hunk of raw meat to a dog. And how large? R. Mari said: The size of its ear, and a stick right after [to drive it away].[8]

224. Dogs: when one of them barks, the rest gather and bark for no reason.[9]

227. Dogs and cocks hate each other.[12]

228. Our masters taught: Five things are said of a mad dog: its mouth is open, its saliva drips, its ears flap, its tail hangs between its legs, and it walks on the edge of roads. Some say: It also barks, but is not heard.[13]

229. R. Papa said: No one is poorer than a dog or richer than a pig.[14]

230. Hang the heart of a palm on a pig, and he will do his usual thing with it.[15]

231. R. Gamda paid four zuz to sailors to bring him a certain thing, but since they could not find it, they brought him a monkey, which slipped away and scurried into a hole. The sailors dug their way into the hole and found the monkey squatting on precious stones, which they took and brought to R. Gamda.[16]

232. R. Hami bar Ukba said in the name of R. Yose bar R. Hanina: The sages surmised that a mountain animal will not grow in a valley and a valley animal will not grow on a mountain.

Diocletian used to oppress the inhabitants of Panias, who said to him, "We will go elsewhere." His counselor advised him, "They will not go away, and if they do go, they will come back. Should you wish to test the matter, get hold of some gazelles and send them to a distant land—in the end, they will return to their native place." He did so. He got hold of some gazelles, covered their horns with silver, and sent them off to Africa. At the end of three years, they [all] returned to their native place.[1]

233. A gazelle sleeps with one eye open and the other closed.[2]

234. "Knowest thou the time when the wild goats of the rocks bring forth?" (Job 39:1). The wild goat is cruel toward her young, and when about to crouch to give birth, she goes up to the top of a mountain, so that the young will fall out of her and be killed. Hence, the Holy One readies a vulture for her, to catch the young on its wings and set it down before its dam. Not even by an instant does the vulture come too soon or too late, for if the vulture were an instant too soon or too late, the youngling would be killed.

"Canst thou mark when the hinds calve?" (Job 39:1). The hind has a narrow womb. When she crouches to be delivered, the Holy One provides her with a drago,[3] which bites her in the abdomen, so that the fawn is loosened from its place [and falls out]. Were the drago there an instant too soon or too late, the fawn would die. And after the hind gives birth, what does the Holy One do? He provides an herb for her, which she eats and is healed by.[4]

235. "The high mountains are for wild goats" (Ps. 104:18). R. Yudan said: For whose sake were high mountains created? For the wild goats' sake. There, a wild she-goat, weak and afraid of predatory beasts, [may find shelter]. Then, too, when she wishes to drink, the Holy One throws her into a state of frenzy, so that she strikes the ground with her horns. When the predatory beast hears the noise she makes, it flees.[5]

236. When a hind is thirsty, she digs a hole, fixes her horns in it, and in her distress pants before the Holy One. The Holy One brings up the deep for her, and the deep brings up water for her.[6]

237. R. Ila said in the name of R. Simeon ben Lakish that R. Meir used to say: The tahash[7] of Moses' day was a distinct species, and the sages are undecided whether it belonged to the genus of wild beasts or to the genus of domestic animals. On its forehead it had one horn. During the construction of the Tabernacle, the animal was provided for Moses. After he made [the coverings for the] Tabernacle out of its skins, the tahash disappeared.[8]

238. The keresh[9] is of the genus of wild beasts and has only one horn.[10]

239. R. Judah said: The keresh is the stag of [the forest] on high; the tigres is the lion of [the forest] on high.

R. Joseph said: The hide of the stag of the [forest] on high is sixteen cubits long.

R. Kahana said: The distance from one ear of the lion of the [forest] on high to the other is nine cubits.[11]

240. A Caesar once said to R. Joshua ben Hananiah, "Your God is likened to a lion, for it is written, 'The lion hath roared, who will not fear? The Lord God hath spoken, who can but prophesy?' [Amos 3:8]. Wherein lies His greatness? Surely a horseman can [easily] kill a lion!" R. Joshua: "He has been likened not to an ordinary lion but to the lion of [the forest] on high!" "I desire," said Caesar, "that you show it to me." R. Joshua: "You will be unable to look at it." Caesar: "Nevertheless, I insist." So R. Joshua entreated God's mercy, and the lion [of the forest on high] was forced to move from its place. When it was four hundred parasangs distant, it roared once; all the pregnant women miscarried, and the walls of Rome collapsed. When it was three hundred parasangs distant, it roared again; the teeth of men fell out, and Caesar himself fell from his throne to the ground. "I beg of you," he implored, "entreat God's mercy that this lion may return to its place." R. Joshua did entreat God's mercy, and it was returned.[12]

241. Once, R. Hanina ben Dosa saw a lion and said to him: O you weakling of a king, have I not adjured you not to be seen in the Land of Israel? The lion fled at once, but R. Hanina ran after him and said: Forgive my having called you "weakling," for He who created you called you "mighty"—"the lion which is mightiest among the beasts" (Prov. 30:30).[13]

242. While R. Simeon ben Halafta was walking on the road, he was met by lions, who roared at him. So he quoted, "The young lions roar after their prey" (Ps. 104:21). At that, two joints of meat came down [from heaven], and the lions ate one and left the other. R. Simeon ben Halafta took the joint they left to the house of study and inquired about it: Is it unclean or is it clean [and fit to be eaten]? The sages replied: Nothing unclean comes down from heaven.[14]

243. R. Papa said: We have a tradition that a lion will not attack two persons.

But we see that it does. However, so Rami bar Abba explained, no wild beast will endeavor to overpower a human being unless he appears to it to be an animal, as is said, "Man will not abide in honor when he appears to be an animal—he will perish" (Ps. 49:13).[1]

244. While David was tending sheep, he came upon the re'em asleep in the wilderness. Thinking it was a mountain, he climbed upon it and continued to tend his sheep. The re'em woke up and arose, and David, astride its horns, was lifted as high as the heavens. At that moment David prayed to the Holy One to bring him down from the re'em. What did the Holy One do? He caused a lion to come [toward the re'em], and when the re'em saw the lion, he was afraid of it and cringed before it, for the lion is king of all beasts and cattle. When David saw the lion, he also was afraid of it. But then the Holy One caused a stag to come along, and as the lion sprang away in pursuit of it, David descended and went his way. Hence he said, "Save me from the lion's mouth; for Thou hast answered me from the horns of the re'mim (Ps. 22:22).[2]

245. It happened that a lion, a dog, and an Ethiopian gnat[3] were together. The lion was about to mangle the dog, but when he saw the Ethiopian gnat, he drew back in fear, for the Ethiopian gnat is the scourge of the lion, even as the dog is the scourge of the Ethiopian gnat. Thus, the three creatures did no harm to one another. When R. Akiva saw this, he quoted, "How manifold are Thy works, O Lord! In wisdom hast Thou made them all" (Ps. 104:24).[4]

246. Our masters taught: There are five instances in which the weak cast fear on the strong: the fear of a certain reptile on a lion, the fear of a gnat on an elephant,[5] the fear of a spider on a scorpion,[6] the fear of a swallow on an eagle,[7] and the fear of a stickleback on Leviathan. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: And the proof? "He strengtheneth the despoiled over the strong" (Amos 5:9).[8]

247. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: All that the Holy One created in His world, He created male and female. So, too, Leviathan the bolt-straight serpent and Leviathan the coiled serpent, He created male and female, and if they had mated with each other, [their numerous progeny] would have destroyed the entire world, all of it. What did the Holy One do? He castrated the male and killed the female, preserving her in brine for the righteous in the world-to-come. Also the Behemoth,[9] which [daily] eats up the grass of a thousand hills, He created male and female. And if they had mated with each other, [their numerous progeny] would have destroyed the entire world, all of it. What did the Holy One do? He castrated the male and froze the female, preserving her for the righteous in the time-to-come.[10]

248. R. Yohanan said: When Leviathan is hungry, it emits a fiery breath from its mouth and brings all the waters of the deep to a boil, and but for Leviathan's sticking its head into the Garden of Eden, no creature could endure the stench of its breath. When Leviathan is thirsty, it makes many furrows in the sea.[11]

249. "Mine . . . is the Behemoth upon a thousand hills" (Ps. 50:10). I, says God, have a unique creature whom I made for your sustenance in the time-to-come. It is the Behemoth, couched on a thousand mountains, and these thousand mountains provide it with all kinds of herbs and all kinds of other victuals to eat.

How does it drink? Some say: Its head is opposite the mouth of the Jordan, with its mouth directly against the river, so that the Jordan pours into its mouth, and thus it drinks its waters. And some say that it swallows in a single draft all the water that the Jordan gathers up in six months.[12]

Travelers' Tales

250. Rabbah bar Bar Hanah reported: Seafarers told me:[13] The wave capable of sinking a ship looks as though a white fringe of fire is at its crest, and if we strike it with clubs on which is engraved "I am that I am, Yah, the Lord of Hosts, Amen, Amen, Selah," it wanes.

More. Seafarers also told me: Between one wave and the next there is a distance of three hundred parasangs, and the height of each wave is three hundred parasangs. Once, while we were on a sea voyage, a wave lifted us up so high that we saw the resting place of the smallest star—it was the size of a field in which forty seah of mustard seed could be sown. Had the wave lifted us a bit higher, we would have been incinerated by the star's heat. Then we heard one wave calling to the other, "Mate, if there is anything in the world that you did not sweep away, I will go and destroy it." The other replied, "Go forth and behold the power of your Creator, who gave us no permission to go beyond the sand [on the shore], be it even as little as the breadth of a thread."[14]

251. Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said further: I saw Ormuzd the son of Lilith running so fast on the parapet of Mahoza's wall that a rider galloping below on horseback could not keep up with him. Once, the people of Mahoza saddled for Ormuzd two she-mules which stood on the two bridges of the Robnag; and he jumped from one she-mule to the other, and back again from the other to the one, while holding in his hands two cups of wine, pouring from one to the other, and back again from the other to the one, and not a drop fell to the ground. He was able to do so even though it was the sort of day when "waves mounted up to heaven and plunged down to the depths" (Ps. 107:26).[1]

252. Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said: I saw a re'em only a day old that was as big as Mount Tabor. The length of its neck was three parasangs, and the place where its head rested was a parasang and a half. When it dropped its turds, they stopped the Jordan's flow.[2]

253. Rabbah bar Bar Hanah further stated: I saw a frog the size of the Fort of Hagronia. A serpent came and swallowed the frog; then came a raven, and, after swallowing the serpent, it flew up and perched high on a tree. Pause and consider how strong that tree must have been [to support such a giant raven]. R. Papa bar Samuel said: Had I not been there myself, I would not have believed it.[3]

254. Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said further: Once, while traveling on a ship, we saw a fish in whose nostrils a stickleback had entered, so that the fish died. When the water cast the dead fish onto the shore, sixty towns were destroyed thereby, sixty towns ate of it, and sixty towns salted [what was left of it], and three hundred kegs of oil were filled from one of its eyeballs. On returning after twelve months, we saw that building joists were being sawn from its skeleton, and with these the towns were rebuilt.[4]

255. Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said further: Once, while traveling on a ship, we saw a fish whose back was covered by a sandbank upon which reeds grew. Thinking that we had come upon dry land, we went up and baked and cooked on the fish's back. However, when its back became hot, the fish turned over, and had not the ship been close by, we would have drowned.[5]

256. Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said further: Once, while we were traveling on a ship, it sailed for three days and three nights between one fin of a fish and the other. The fish was swimming against the wind, while we were sailing with the wind. Lest you suppose that the ship did not sail very fast, R. Dimi, when he came [from the Land of Israel], stated that the ship covered sixty parasangs in the time it takes to heat a kettle of water. When a horseman shot an arrow, the ship kept ahead of the arrow.[6]

257. Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said further: Once, while traveling on a ship, we saw a bird standing up to its ankles in water, while its head reached the sky. Supposing that the water was not deep, we were about to go down into it to cool ourselves, but a divine voice called out, "Do not go down here, for seven years ago a carpenter's adze was dropped [into this water], and it has not yet reached the bottom." And not only because the water is so deep, but because it is so rapid.

That bird, R. Ashi said, was ziz of the fields [which darkens the sun with its wings].[7]

258. Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said further: Once, while traveling in a desert, we saw geese that were so fat their feathers were forced out, and streams of fat flowed from under them. When I asked them, "May I have a share of your flesh in the world-to-come?" one lifted up its wing for me and the other lifted up its leg for me.[8]

When I came before R. Eleazar, he said to me: Israel will be called to account for [the sufferings[9] of] these [geese].[10]

259. Rabbah bar Bar Hanah related: Once, while traveling in a desert, we were joined by an Arab merchant who would pick up some sand, smell it, and say, "This road leads to such-and-such a place, and that road leads to such-and-such a place." We asked him, "How far are we from water?" He replied, "Give me some sand." We gave it to him, and he said, "Eight parasangs." After traveling several parasangs, we gave him more sand, and he smelled it and told us that we were three parasangs away. When I substituted sand from one place with sand from another place, he was not fooled.

That Arab also said to me, "Come, and I will show you the Israelites who died [during the forty years' wandering] in the wilderness." I went [with him] and saw them. They appeared to be in a state of exhilaration, lying on their backs. The knee of one of them was raised up, and the Arab merchant passed under that knee, riding his camel and holding his spear erect, without touching the knee's hamstring. I snipped off a corner of the purple cloak of one of them; and suddenly we found ourselves unable to budge from the place where we were. The Arab said to me, "You've taken something from them, haven't you? Return it, for we have a tradition that he who takes anything from them cannot move from his place." After I returned the corner of the cloak, we were able to move on.

That Arab also said to me, "Come, and I will show you Mount Sinai." I went and saw that it was surrounded by scorpions, which stood there as [large as] white asses. Then I heard a divine voice: "Woe is Me that I uttered an oath [to send Israel into exile]. Who will nullify it for Me?"

When later I came before the sages, they said to me, "Every Rabbah is an ass, and every bar Bar Hanah is a fool. You should have said; 'Your oath is nullified, Your oath is nullified.' "

That Arab also said to me, "Come, and I will show you the men of Korah who were swallowed by the earth." I went and saw two cracks in the ground, out of which smoke was rising. I then took fleeces of wool, dipped them in water, stuck them on the tip of a spear, and lowered it into one of the cracks. When I pulled the spear out, the fleeces were singed. The Arab then said to me, "Listen closely. What do you hear?" I heard the men of Korah crying out, "Moses and his Torah are truth, and we are liars." The Arab said to me, "Every thirty days, Gehenna, turning them around like meat in a stew pot, returns them here, and they cry out, 'Moses and his Torah are truth, and we are liars.' "

The Arab also said to me, "Come, and I will show you the spot where heaven and earth kiss each other." I went and saw that heaven was provided with ever so many windows. So I took my basket [which contained my food] and put it into a window in heaven. When I finished my Tefillah, I looked for the basket but did not find it, so I asked, "Are there thieves here?" The Arab replied, "Heaven is a revolving wheel—wait until tomorrow, and you will find the basket coming back."[1]

260. R. Yohanan related: Once we were traveling on a ship and saw a fish raise its head out of the sea. Its eyes seemed like two moons, and as much water gushed from its two nostrils as from both rivers of Sura.[2]

261. R. Safra related: Once, while traveling on a ship, we saw a fish that raised its head out of the sea. It had horns on which was engraved: "I, one of the lesser creatures of the sea, am three hundred parasangs long, and yet I can fit into Leviathan's mouth."

R. Ashi said: This fish was a sea-goat [which has to dig for its food, and that is why it has horns].[3]

262. R. Yohanan related: Once, while traveling on a ship, we saw a chest set with precious stones and pearls, and encompassed by a species of fish called karsha. When a diver went down to bring up the chest, a fish attacked him and was about to bite off his thigh. But the diver threw a bottle full of vinegar at it and was able to continue his dive. Just then, a divine voice came forth, saying, "What have you people to do with the chest that belongs to R. Hanina ben Dosa's wife, who is to store in it purple dye for the righteous in the world-to-come!"[4]

263. Rav Judah the Indian related: Once, while we were traveling on a ship, we saw in the sea a precious stone that was encompassed by a serpent. When a diver descended to bring it up, the serpent came and was about to swallow the ship. But along came a raven and bit off the serpent's head, and the water turned into blood. Immediately, a second serpent came, took the precious stone, hung it over the dead serpent, and brought it back to life. So again it was about to swallow the ship. But along came a bird, bit off its head, took hold of the precious stone, and threw it into the ship. We had a supply of salted birds in the ship, and when we touched them with the stone, [they revived] and flew off, taking the stone with them.[5]

264. R. Ashi said: R. Huna bar Nathan told me [the following]: Once, while walking in the desert, we happened to have with us a leg of meat, which we cut up, porged,[6] and put on the grass. Even before we could bring kindling wood, the leg [which had been cut up into pieces] became whole. We roasted it, and when we returned to that place after twelve months, we found the coals of the fire we had made still glowing. When I came before Amemar, he said to me, "That grass was dragon's blood [a resin]; those coals were broom."[7]

265. R. Ishmael ben Satriel of Arkat-livnah testified before Rabbi: Lettuces in our place have sixty myriads of peelings [around their core], and a gnat in our place has sixty myriads of membranes in its stomach.

Once a cedar fell in our place, and sixteen wagons side by side passed across the most slender part of its trunk. Once the egg of a bar-yokani[8] fell, and it drowned sixty large cities and shattered three hundred cedars.[9]

Human Beings

266. There are seven created things, each higher in importance than the other.

Higher in importance than the earth, the Holy One created a firmament.

Higher in importance than the firmament, He created stars to give light to the world.

Higher in importance than the stars, He created trees, which yield fruit, while the stars yield no fruit.

Higher in importance than the trees, He created winds, which are able to go hither and yon, while trees cannot stir from their place.

Higher in importance than the winds, He created animals, which are able to eat and drink, while winds neither eat nor drink.

Higher in importance than the animals, He created man, in whom there is understanding, while in animals there is no understanding.

Higher in importance than man, He created ministering angels, who are able to go from one end of the world to the other, whereas man cannot.[10]

267. Our masters taught: Six things are said concerning human beings. In regard to three, they are like ministering angels; in regard to three others, like animals. Three like ministering angels: they have understanding like the ministering angels, they walk erect like the ministering angels, they can use the sacred tongue like the ministering angels. Three like animals: they eat and drink like animals, they procreate like animals, and they excrete like animals.[1]

268. We have been taught that R. Meir used to say: One man differs from another in three ways: in voice, in appearance, and in understanding.[2]

269. We have been taught: With what part of the body does the formation of an embryo begin? With the head. Abba Saul said: With the navel, which sends its roots in every direction.[3]

270. Abba Saul said: In its primary stage, the fetus resembles a locust, its two eyes being like the two eyes of a fly. The two, according to R. Hiyya, are far removed from each other. Its two nostrils are also like the two eyes of a fly, being near each other, according to R. Hiyya. Its two ears are also like the two eyes of a fly. Its two arms are like scarlet ribbons. Its mouth is as narrow as a hair stretched out. Its body is as round as a lentil, with its limbs pressed together as a shapeless lump. If the fetus is a female, its body is the size of a barley grain with a slit across its length. [It goes without saying that] the fetus has no outlines of either hands or feet.[4]

271. R Eleazar stated: What does a fetus resemble when it is in its mother's womb? A nut floating in a bowl of water. Should a man put his finger on it, the finger would sink whatever it touched.[5]

272. Our masters taught: During the first three months [of pregnancy], the fetus occupies the lowest chamber [in the womb]; during the middle months, it occupies the middle chamber; and during the last three months, it occupies the uppermost chamber. When the time arrives for the fetus to emerge, it turns over and emerges—the turning over is the cause of the woman's pains.

The pain in giving birth to a female child is more intense than in giving birth to a male, for a female turns its face upward while a male does not.[6]

273. R. Hinena bar Papa expounded as follows: What is implied in "Who doeth great things past finding out; yea, marvelous things without number" (Job 9:10)? That you are to pause and consider the contrast between the Holy One's capacity and man's capacity. Man's capacity: if he put a valuable article in a well-tied skin bottle with its orifice turned upward, it may or may not stay safe. Whereas the Holy One fashions the embryo in a woman's inner part, which is open and whose orifice is turned downward, yet the embryo stays safe.

[Another difference]: When man places articles in the pan of a scale, the pan sinks lower and lower as the weight increases. [When] the Holy One [places a fetus in the womb], it rises higher and higher [from the lowest chamber in the womb to the uppermost] as the fetus's weight increases.

R. Yose the Galilean expounded: What is implied in the verse "I will give thanks unto Thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made; wonderful are Thy works; and that my soul knoweth right well" (Ps. 139:14)? That you are to pause and consider the contrast between the Holy One's capacity and man's capacity. Man's capacity: if he plants various seeds in a bed, each will grow only into its own species; whereas the Holy One fashions the embryo in a woman's innards in such a way that the seed of the male and the seed of the female grow into a single species.

According to some, R. Yose expounded the psalm verse in another way: If a dyer puts different ingredients into a caldron, they all unite into one color, whereas the Holy One fashions the embryo in a woman's innards in such a way that each element develops into a distinct entity.[7]

274. R. Simlai delivered the following discourse: What does an embryo in the womb of its mother resemble? A writing tablet that stays folded up. The embryo's hands rest on its two temples, both its elbows on its two knees, and its heels against its buttocks. Its head lies between its knees, its mouth is closed, and its navel is open. It eats what its mother eats and drinks what its mother drinks, but it produces no feces, because otherwise it would kill its mother. However, as soon as it goes forth into the air of the world, that which had been closed is opened, and that which had been open is closed. Otherwise, the newborn could not live even one hour.[8]

275. There are two hundred and forty-eight parts in a man: thirty in the foot,—there being six in each toe—ten in the ankle, two in the shank, five in the knee, one in the thigh, three in the hip, eleven ribs, thirty parts in the hand—there being six in each finger—two in the forearm, two in the elbow, one in the upper arm, and four in the shoulder. Thus, there are one hundred and one parts on one side of the body and one hundred and one parts on the other side of the body. There are also eighteen vertebrae in the spine, nine parts in the head, eight in the neck, six in the breast, and five in the orifices [of generation and excretion].[9]

276. R. Judah related in the name of Samuel: R. Ishmael's disciples once dissected the body of a prostitute who had been condemned by the king to be burned. Upon examination, they found in it two hundred and fifty-two parts. So the disciples came to R. Ismael and asked, "How many parts in a human being?" He replied, "Two hundred and forty-eight." The disciples: "But we examined a body and found two hundred and fifty-two parts." R. Ishmael: "Perhaps you examined a woman, in whom, according to Scripture, two hinges [in her sexual organ] and two doors [of the womb] are added."[1]

277. Our masters taught: The kidneys counsel, the heart discerns, the tongue shapes [words], the mouth articulates, the windpipe produces the voice, the gullet takes in all kinds of food, the lungs absorb all kinds of moisture [from the stomach], the liver is the seat of anger, the gall lets a drop fall into the liver and allays anger, the spleen produces laughter, the large intestine grinds food, the maw produces sleep, and the nose awakens. Should the organ that induces sleep awaken, or the wakener fall asleep, the man would pine away. The sages taught: Should both organs cause sleep or both keep awake, the man would die at once.[2]

278. R. Tahalifa of Caesarea said in the name of R. Fila: Pause and consider how many miracles the Holy One performs for man and he knows it not. If a man swallowed dry bread, it would go down into his bowels and lacerate his innards. So the Holy One created a fountain of saliva in his throat, which conveys the bread down safely.[3]

279. [The food proceeds] from the mouth to the gullet, from the gullet to the stomach, from the stomach to the digestive organ, from the digestive organ to the duodenum, from the duodenum to the second stomach, from the second stomach to the small winding intestine, from the small winding intestine to the large winding intestine, from the large winding intestine to the mucal sieve, from the mucal sieve to the rectum, from the rectum to the anus, and from the anus to outside the body.[4]

280. R. Levi said: Six organs serve a man—three are under his control, and three are not under his control. The ones under his control: the mouth, the hands, and the feet; the ones not under his control: the eyes, the ears, and the nose. And when the Holy One wishes it, even the ones under his control are no longer under his control.[5]

281. The face that the Holy One created in man is no more than the distance between the tip of the thumb and the tip of the index finger when held apart; and though it has many fountains, the fluids do not mingle. The fluid of the eyes is salty, the fluid in the ears greasy, the fluid in the nose foul, the fluid in the mouth sweet. Why is the fluid in the eyes salty? Because if a man were able to weep for the dead all the time, his eyes would soon be blinded. But because the fluid is salty,[6] the man stops and weeps no more. Why is the fluid in the ears greasy? Because when a man hears bad news, if it were retained in his ears, it would penetrate his heart, and he would die. However, because the ear fluid is greasy, he takes the news in at one ear and lets it out at the other. Why is the fluid in the nose foul? Because when a man inhales a bad odor, if it were not for the foul liquid in the nose, which arrests it, the man would immediately die. Why is the fluid in the mouth sweet? Because sometimes a man eats food that disagrees with him, so that he throws it up, and if the fluid in the mouth were not sweet, he would not recover [from his revulsion].[7]

282. The verse "He that made thee, and placed thee on settings" (Deut. 32:6) implies that the Holy One created in man many organs, each in its own setting, and if any change is made in an organ's setting, the man will be unable to go on living.[8]

283. "For Thou art great, and doest wondrous things" (Ps. 86:10). R. Tanhum said: Should a leather bottle have a hole in it as small as a needle's eye, all of its air will escape. Yet though man is formed with many hollows and many orifices, his breath does not escape through them.[9]

284. We have been taught that Abba Saul said: When I was a gravedigger, I made a practice of carefully observing the bones of the dead. The bones of one who drank undiluted wine are burned, those of one who drank wine excessively diluted are translucent, and those of one who drank wine properly mixed are full of marrow. The bones of a person whose drinking exceeded his eating are burned, those of one whose eating exceeded his drinking are translucent, and those of one who ate and drank in a proper balance are full of marrow.[10]

285. We have been taught that Abba Saul (according to some, R. Yohanan) said: When I was a gravedigger, on one occasion, while pursuing a stag, I entered the thighbone of a corpse, and though I pursued the stag for three parasangs, I reached neither the stag nor the end of the thighbone. When I came back out, I was told that the thighbone was Og's, king of Bashan.[11]

286. We have been taught that Abba Saul said: When I was a gravedigger, on one occasion a cave opened under me, and I found myself standing up to my nose in the eyeball of a corpse. When I came back out, I was told that it was Absalom's eye.[12]

CHAPTER TWO

MATTERS PERTAINING TO DIVINATION AND HEALING

The Influence of Constellations

1. In the notebook of R. Joshua ben Levi, it was recorded: He who is born on the first day of the week [Sunday] will be either completely virtuous or completely wicked. What is the reason? Because on that day light and darkness were created. He who is born on the second day of the week [Monday] will be bad tempered. What is the reason? Because on that day the waters were divided. He who is born on the third day of the week [Tuesday] will be wealthy and carnal. What is the reason? Because on that day herbs were created.[1] He who is born on the fourth day of the week [Wednesday] will be endowed with wisdom and understanding. What is the reason? Because on that day the luminaries were suspended in the sky. He who is born on the fifth day of the week [Thursday] will practice benevolence. What is the reason? Because on that day fishes and birds were created.[2] He who is born on the eve of the Sabbath [Friday] will be a seeker, which means, as R. Nahman bar Isaac indicated, a seeker after good deeds.[3] He who is born on the Sabbath will die on the Sabbath, because, in order to assist in his delivery, the great day of the Sabbath had to be desecrated.[4]

R. Hanina said to his disciples: Go out and tell the son of Levi: not the constellation of the day but the planet regnant in the hour of a man's birth is the determining influence. He who is born under the sun will be radiant in his appearance; he will eat and drink what is his, and his secret deeds will be quickly uncovered, so that if he should try to take what is not his, he will not succeed. He who is born under Venus [Nogah] will be wealthy and carnal. What is the reason? Because the fire [of lust] hangs from it. He who is born under Mercury [Kokhav] will be perceptive and wise. What is the reason? Because Mercury is the sun's scribe. He who is born under the moon will be a man to suffer illness; he will build and demolish, demolish and build,[5] eat and drink that which is not his;[6] and his secrets will stay hidden,[7] so that if he takes what is not his, he will succeed. He who is born under Saturn [Shabbetai] will be a man whose plans will be frustrated.[8] Others say: [All] malicious designs against him will be frustrated. He who is born under Jupiter [Tzedek] will be a right-doing man [tzadkan]. He who is born under Mars [Maadim] will be a shedder of blood,[9] which, as R. Ashi observed, means either a surgeon, a brigand, a slaughterer, or a circumciser. Rabbah said: I was born under Mars [and I am none of these]. Abbaye retorted: You too, sir, [as judge], inflict punishment and put to death.[10]

2. R Hanina said: The planetary influence gives wisdom, the planetary influence gives wealth; and Israel also stands under planetary influence. But R. Yohanan maintained: Israel is free from planetary influence. Now, R. Yohanan is consistent with his view set forth elsewhere, for R. Yohanan said: How do we know that Israel is free from planetary influence? Because it is said, "Thus saith the Lord: Learn not the way of the nations, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven, for only the nations need be dismayed by them" (Jer. 10:2): they are to be dismayed—not Israel. Rav, too, holds that Israel is free from planetary influence, for R. Judah said in the name of Rav: How do we know that Israel is free from planetary influence? Because "He brought him forth beyond [heaven's planets]" (Gen. 15:5). When Abraham stated before the Holy One, "Master of the universe, one born in my house is to be mine heir" (Gen. 15:3), the Holy One replied, "Not so, thine heir will be he that shall come forth out of thine own bowels" (Gen. 15:4). Abraham spoke up: "Master of the universe, I gazed into what my planet bodes and found that I am not fated to beget a child." The Holy One replied, "Give up gazing at planets; [Israel is free from planetary influence]. How have you reached your conclusion? Is it because Jupiter [Tzedek, your planet], stands in the [chilly] west?[11] I will turn it back and place it in the [warm] east."[12]

3. R. Nahman bar Isaac's mother was told by astrologers, "Your son will be a thief." So she did not let him be bareheaded, saying to him, "Cover your head, so that the fear of Heaven may be upon you, and pray for God's mercy." Now, he did not know why she spoke to him thus. One day, while he sat and studied under a date palm, the cover fell off his head. Just then he looked up and saw the dates on the palm, and his evil inclination took hold of him. So he climbed up and bit off a cluster of dates with his teeth.[13]

4. Rava said: [Length of] life, children, and sustenance depend not on merit but on mazzal [planetary influence]. Take Rabbah and R. Hisda, both of whom were sages, both saintly. When one prayed, rain came, even as when the other prayed, rain came. Yet R. Hisda lived to the age of ninety-two,[1] while Rabbah lived only to the age of forty.[2] In R. Hisda's house, there were sixty[3] wedding feasts; in Rabbah's house, sixty bereavements. In R. Hisda's house, dogs were fed bread of fine flour, which was not missed; in Rabbah's house, barley bread was for human beings, and even that was hardly to be had.[4]

5. The sages said in the name of R. Yose of Hutzal: What is the proof that one should not consult astrologers [about the influence of the planets]? "You shall be wholehearted with the Lord your God" (Deut. 18:13).[5]

Dreams

6. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: A man is shown in a dream only matters that are already in his own thoughts, as is said, "As for thee, O king, thine own thoughts come [into thy mind] upon thy bed" (Dan. 2:29); or, if you prefer, from here, "That thou mayest know the thoughts of thy heart" (Dan. 2:30). Rava said: You can see it for yourself: a man is never shown in a dream a date palm of gold or an elephant going through the eye of a needle.[6]

7. A Caesar asked R. Joshua ben Hananiah: You say that you are great sages. Tell me, then—what will I see in my dream? R. Joshua: You will see the Persians come upon you, enslave you, despoil you, and make you graze unclean animals with a gold crook [in your hand]. Caesar thought of R. Joshua's prediction all day and saw it [in his dream] that night.[7]

8. King Shapur [I] said to Samuel, "You say that you are great sages. Tell me then—what will I see in my dream?" Samuel: "You will see the Romans come, take you into captivity, and make you grind date pits in a golden mill. The king thought of that prediction all day and saw it [in his dream] that night.[8]

9. A man sleeping here in Babylonia might see a dream taking place in Spain.[9]

10. "The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream. What hath the straw to do with the wheat?" (Jer. 23:28). What connection is there between straw and wheat, and a dream? Well, R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai, just as there can be no wheat without straw, so there can be no dream without some stuff of nonsense.[10]

11. R. Berekhiah said: Even if part of a dream is fulfilled, all of it is never fulfilled. And the proof? From Joseph, who in his dream saw "the sun and the moon bow down. . . . And his father . . . said unto him: . . . 'Shall I and thy mother indeed come?' " (Gen. 37:9–10). [How could his mother come?] At that time, she was no longer in the world.[11]

12. When Samuel had a bad dream, he used to say, "The dreams speak falsely" (Zech. 10:2). When he had a good dream, he would say, "I wonder if dreams ever speak falsely—is it not said, 'I [God] speak with him in a dream' (Num. 12:6)?"[12]

13. Dreams have no significance, one way or another.[13]

14. A dream is one-sixtieth of prophecy.[14]

15. R. Yohanan said: If at the moment of rising, a scriptural text comes to a man's mouth, that is a minor prophecy.[15]

16. R. Yohanan said: Three kinds of dreams are fulfilled: a morning dream, a dream that a friend has about one, and a dream that is interpreted in the midst of a dream. Some say: Also a dream that is repeated.[16]

17. R. Huna said: A good man is shown a bad dream, and a bad man is shown a good dream: in all of David's years, he never had a good dream; in all of Ahithophel's years, he never had a bad dream.[17]

18. R. Ze'era said: A man who goes seven days without a dream is called evil, for Scripture says, "He that hath it shall abide satisfied; he shall not be visited with evil" (Prov. 19:23). Read not savea, "satisfied," but sheva, "seven."[18]

19. "There shall no evil befall thee" (Ps. 91:10). This means, said R. Hisda, citing R. Jeremiah bar Abba, that no bad dreams or evil thoughts will disturb you.[19]

20. The sages said in the name of Rav: Fasting is as effective against a dream as fire against woodchips. Provided, said R. Hisda, the fast was on the same day as the dream. Even, added R. Joseph, on the Sabbath.[1]

21. R. Hisda said: There is reality in every dream except one that occurs during a fast. As long as a dream is not interpreted, it is like a letter that has not been read.[2] Neither a good dream nor a bad dream is ever entirely fulfilled. A bad dream is better[3] than a good dream. The sadness caused by a bad dream is in itself enough, and the joy caused by a good dream is in itself enough. A bad dream is worse than being flogged.

R. Joseph said: In a good dream, the joy is such that, [blind though I am], it all but gives me sight.[4]

22. The sages said in the name of R. Yohanan: He who has a dream and is worried about it should have it given a good meaning in the presence of three. He should bring three [friends] and say to them, "I saw a good dream," and they should say to him, "It is good, and may it be good. May He who is everywhere turn it to good. Seven times may it be decreed for you from heaven that it should be good," and it will be good.[5]

23. He who had a dream but does not remember what he saw should stand before the priests at the time when they lift their hands in blessing and pray thus: "Master of the universe, I am Yours and my dreams are Yours. I dreamed a dream, but I do not know what it is. Whether I have dreamed about myself, or my colleagues dreamed about me, or I dreamed about others—if the dreams are good dreams, strengthen them and confirm them like the dreams of Joseph; and if they require healing, heal them, as the waters of Marah were healed by Moses our teacher, as Miriam was healed of her leprosy, as Hezekiah was healed of his sickness, and as the waters of Jericho were healed by Elisha. As You turned the curse of the wicked Balaam into a blessing, so may You turn all my dreams into something good for me." He should endeavor to conclude his Tefillah when the priests conclude their blessing, so that the congregation may answer, "Amen!" If he cannot manage this, he should say, "You who are majestic on high, who abide in might, You are peace, and Your Name is peace. May it be Your will to bestow peace upon us."[6]

24. R. Birayim, citing a certain elder—who was the elder? R. Banaah—said: In Jerusalem, there were twenty-four interpreters of dreams. Once I dreamed a dream and went to all of them, and not one agreed with the other in the interpretation of my dream, yet all the interpretations were fulfilled, confirming the saying, "All dreams follow the utterances of the mouth." R. Eleazar asked: What is the proof that all dreams follow the [utterances of the] mouth? "It came to pass, as he interpreted to us, so it was" (Gen. 41:13). Rava said: This is so, provided the interpretation corresponds to the substance of the dream, for "to each man according to his dream he did interpret" (Gen. 41:12).[7]

25. Bar Hadaya was an interpreter of dreams. He would give a favorable interpretation to one who paid him [a fee] and an unfavorable interpretation to one who did not. Abbaye and Rava each had [the same] dream. Abbaye gave him a zuz, and Rava gave him nothing. The two said to him: In our dream, we had read to us the verse, "Thine ox shall be slain before thine eyes, and thou shalt not eat of it" (Deut. 28:31). To Rava, Bar Hadaya said: Your merchandise will depreciate, and because of the distress in your heart, you will be unable to eat. To Abbaye, he said, Your merchandise will appreciate so much that you will be unable to eat because of the joy in your heart.

The two reported: We had read to us the verse "Thou shalt carry much seed out into the field, and shalt gather little in" (Deut. 28:38). To Abbaye, [Bar Hadaya] interpreted only the first half of the verse; to Rava, only the second half.

The two reported: We had read to us the verse "And all the peoples of the earth shall see that the Name of the Lord is called upon thee; and they shall be afraid of thee" (Deut. 28:10). To Abbaye, Bar Hadaya said: Your fame will go forth, you will become head of the academy, and all people will fear you. To Rava, he said: You will be arrested in the company of thieves, and because of what will be done to you, all will be the more afraid for themselves. The next day, the royal treasury was broken into by thieves, and the authorities arrested Rava. So people were afraid and said: If Rava was arrested, how much more and more are we likely to be.

The two told Bar Hadaya: We saw a head of lettuce lying over the mouth of a cask. To Abbaye, Bar Hadaya said: Your business will double as speedily as the growth of a lettuce. To Rava, he said: Your business will prove as bitter as a lettuce.

Later, Rava went to Bar Hadaya by himself and reported: I saw two doves flying away. Bar Hadaya: You will divorce two wives. Rava said to him, I saw two turnip tops.[8] He replied: You will receive two blows with a cudgel. Rava went and sat all that day in the house of study, where he came upon two blind men quarreling with each other and went to separate them, and they gave him two blows with their cudgels. They raised their cudgels to give Rava a third blow, but he said, "Enough! [In my dream] I saw only two."

Finally, Rava went over, paid Bar Hadaya a fee, and reported: I saw a wall fall down. To which Bar Hadaya replied: You will acquire wealth without limit.

Rava reported: I saw my own house collapse, and everyone came and took it away brick by brick. Bar Hadaya replied, Your teachings will spread throughout the world.

Rava reported: I dreamed that my head was split open and my brains spilled out. Bar Hadaya replied: The feathers stuffed in your pillow will burst out bit by bit. He reported: In my dream I had the Hallel of Egypt[1] read to me. Bar Hadaya replied: Miracles will happen to you.

Once, when Bar Hadaya was traveling with Rava by ship, he said to himself: Why would I accompany a man to whom a miracle will happen?[2] As Bar Hadaya was disembarking, he accidentally dropped a book, which Rava found. He saw written in it: All dreams follow the [interpreter's] mouth. At that, Rava exclaimed, "Wretch! It all depended on you, and you caused me such great distress![3]

26. Ben Dama, the son of R. Ishmael's sister, asked R. Ishmael: I saw that my two jaws fell in. [What does this mean]? R. Ishmael: Two Roman legionaries "jawed" evil against you, and they died.

Bar Kappara said to Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch]: I dreamed that my nose fell off. Rabbi: Fierce anger[4] has been removed from you. Bar Kappara: I dreamed that both my hands were cut off. Rabbi: You will not be in need of the labor of your hands. Bar Kappara: I dreamed that both my legs were cut off. Rabbi: You [will do so well that you] will be able to afford to ride horseback.[5]

27. R. Joshua ben Levi said: He who sees a river in his dream should rise early and say, "Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river" (Isa. 66:12), before another sort of verse, such as "Distress will come in like a river" (Isa. 59:19), occurs to him. He who sees a bird in his dream should rise early and say, "As birds hovering, so will the Lord of hosts protect" (Isa. 31:5), before another sort of verse, such as "Like a sparrow wandering from its nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place" (Prov. 27:8), occurs to him. He who sees grapes in his dream should rise early and say, "I found Israel like grapes in the wilderness" (Hos. 9:10), before another sort of verse, such as "Their grapes are grapes of gall" (Deut. 32:32), occurs to him.[6]

28. R. Hanina said: He who sees a well in a dream will experience peace. R. Hanan said: There are three images in dreams that signify peace: a river, a bird, and a pot.[7]

29. He who sees olive oil in his dream may hope for the light of the Torah.

He who sees an etrog [the hadar tree's fruit] in his dream will be honored [hadur] in the sight of his Maker.

He who sees a cock in his dream may expect a male child; if a hen, a fine garden and joy.[8]

He who sees [whole] eggs[9] in his dream—his petition will be held in abeyance; if broken eggs—his petition will be granted. This holds true also of nuts, cucumbers, all vessels of glass, and all other breakable things like them.

He who dreams that he goes up to a roof will attain high position; that he goes down, will be demoted. He who in a dream enters a big city will have his desires fulfilled; who enters a marsh will be made head of an academy;[10] who enters a forest will become head of students who are mature.[11]

30. R. Levi said: One should await fulfilment of a good dream for as long as twenty-two years. And the proof? Joseph, of whom Scripture says, "Joseph being seventeen years old . . . dreamed a dream (Gen. 37:25), and says later. "Joseph was thirty years old when he stood before Pharaoh" (Gen. 41:46). From seventeen to thirty is how many years? Thirteen, which—together with the seven years of plenty and two years of famine—add up to twenty-two.[12]

Destructive Forces That Afflict Mankind

31. Demons were created at twilight on the eve of the first Sabbath.[13]

32. "Let the earth bring forth living creatures" (Gen. 1:25). These, according to Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] were the demons. The Holy One created their souls, but when He was about to create their bodies, the Sabbath's sanctity began, and He would not create them.[14]

33. R. Jeremiah ben Eleazar said: In all the years that Adam was under the ban,[15] he begot evil spirits—male demons and female demons. For it is said, "Adam lived a hundred and thirty years, and begot a son in his own likeness, after his own image" (Gen. 5:3), from which it follows that until that time [the end of the one hundred thirty years mentioned in the verse] he did not beget after his own image.[16]

34. Our masters taught: Six things are said concerning demons. In regard to three, they are like ministering angels, and in regard to three, they are like human beings. In regard to three, they are like ministering angels: they have wings like ministering angels, they fly from world's end to world's end like ministering angels, and, like ministering angels, they can hear what goes on behind the curtain [of heaven]. In regard to three, they are like human beings: they eat and drink like human beings, they increase and multiply like human beings, and they die like human beings.[1]

35. We have been taught that Abba Benjamin said: If the eye had permission to see [what is invisible], not a creature could withstand demons. Abbaye said: They are more numerous than we are, and they surround us like the ridge encompassing a water ring [dug around a tree]. R. Huna said: Each and every one among us has a thousand [demons] at his left and ten thousand at his right. Rava said: The crush at the Kallah[2] lectures is due to them, fatigue in the knees is due to them, the wearing out of sages' garments is due to demons rubbing against them, the bruising of feet is due to them.

He who wishes to become aware of demons' existence should take well-sifted ashes and sprinkle them around his bed. In the morning, he will see something like the tracks of a cock. He who wishes to see them should take the afterbirth of a black cat that is the offspring of a black cat and firstborn of a firstborn; he should parch the afterbirth in fire, grind it into powder, and put a generous pinch of the mix into his eyes—then he will see the demons. He should pour the rest of the mix into an iron tube and seal it with an iron signet, lest they steal it from him; he should also cover his mouth, so that he will come to no harm.

Though R. Bebai bar Abba did all this, nevertheless, when he saw the demons, he came to harm. But the sages entreated God's mercy in his behalf, and he recovered.[3]

36. Abbaye said: At first I used to say that people should not sit under a drainpipe in order to avoid being drenched with wastewater. But then my master told me: It is because demons are present there.

There is a story of porters who were carrying a cask of wine. Wishing to rest, they put it under a drainpipe, and the cask burst. So they came to Mar bar R. Ashi, who brought rams' horns and exorcised the destructive creature, which then appeared in his presence. When Mar bar R. Ashi asked the demon, "Why did you do this?" the demon replied, "What else could I have done, since they put the cask at my ear." Mar bar R. Ashi: "What business do you have in a place where there are many people? Since you have departed from what is prescribed for you, go and reimburse the porters." The demon: "If the master will fix the time right now when I am to pay them, I will do so." So Mar bar R. Ashi fixed a time, but when the time came, the demon was not there. When he did come, Mar bar R. Ashi asked him, "Why did you not come at the time agreed upon?" The demon replied, "We have no right to take anything that is tied up, sealed, measured, or counted. So I had to wait until I found money that was ownerless [and that money I bring now]."[4]

37. There is the story of what happened to a spirit who abode at a certain well, and another spirit came and wished to expel him from there. Now, a certain pious man whose name was Yose of Tzaytor used to sit and study near that well. So the spirit who had been abiding at the well appeared to him and said, "My master, I have been here in this place many years, and though you and your wives pass here at noon and at night, I have not injured anyone. But of late, a certain spirit has been contending with me each day and seeks to banish me from this place—he is very wicked and cruel, and will not suffer any creature to remain alive." Abba Yose asked, "What are we to do?" The spirit replied, "Go and tell the people of the city: At high noon, take your clubs and sickles, and go at that spirit, shouting, 'Our spirit prevails, our spirit prevails!' and the intruding spirit will flee."

They did as he asked and succeeded in having the intruder take flight. It is said that they did not budge from the place until they saw a kind of blood spot floating in the water [of the well].[5]

38. We have been taught: One should not go out alone on certain nights. Not on the nights of Wednesday or the nights of Sabbath, because Igrat the daughter of Mahalath—she and eighteen myriads of angels of destruction—go forth, and each angel has permission to wreak destruction on his own. Formerly, they were about every day in the week. On one occasion, Igrat met R. Hanina ben Dosa and said to him, "Had they not proclaimed in heaven concerning you, 'Beware of Hanina and his Torah learning,' I would have put you in danger." R. Hanina: "If, [as you say], I am of account in heaven, I decree that you are nevermore to pass through inhabited areas." Igrat: "I beg of you, leave me just a bit of space." So he left her Sabbath nights and Wednesday nights.

On another occasion, Igrat met Abbaye and said to him, "Had they not proclaimed in heaven concerning you, 'Beware of Nahmani[6] and his Torah learning,' I would have put you in danger." Abbaye: "If [as you say], I am of account in heaven, I decree that you nevermore pass through inhabited areas."

But we see that she does pass through them.

Those are the narrow paths in vineyards, which Igrat's host frequents: when their horses bolt [into inhabited areas], Igrat's host follows them to retrieve them.[7]

39. R. Jacob son of R. Aha bar Jacob was once sent by his father to study under Abbaye. When R. Jacob returned, and his father saw that his learning was not overly acute, he said, "Since I appear to be more apt than you, you remain here while I go [and study under Abbaye]." Presently, Abbaye heard that R. Aha was coming. Now, it so happened that at that time a certain demon haunted Abbaye's house of study, so that even during the day, though people entered in pairs, they were harmed. Accordingly, Abbaye ordered his disciples: "Let no one offer lodging to R. Aha [so that he will have to spend the night in the house of study]. Perhaps through his merit a miracle will occur. So R. Aha went into the house of study, where he spent the night. [During the night] the demon appeared to him in the guise of a seven-headed dragon. But each time R. Aha fell on his knees in prayer, one of the demon's heads fell off. The next day, R. Aha chided them: "Had a miracle not occurred, you would have endangered my life."[1]

40. R. Huna said in the name of R. Yose: The demon Bitter Destruction is covered all over with scales and hair, [and he glares] with his one eye, and that eye is in the middle of his chest. He has no power when it is cool in the shade and hot in the sun, but only when it is hot in both shade and sun. He rolls like a ball, and from the seventeenth day of Tammuz to the ninth day of Av, he has power after ten o'clock in the morning and up to three o'clock in the afternoon.[2] And anyone who sees this demon falls upon his face and dies.[3]

41. A demon changes into many colors.[4]

42. R. Joshua ben Levi said: It is forbidden to greet one another by night, for we fear that the other might be a demon.[5]

43. R. Hanina said: It is forbidden to sleep in a house alone, for he who sleeps in a house alone is seized by Lilith [the night demon].[6]

44. To a single person, a destructive spirit may show itself and harm him. To two, it may show itself but not harm them. To three, it will not show itself at all.

R. Zutra bar Tobiah said in the name of Rav: A torch is as protective as two persons, and moonlight as protective as three.[7]

45. R. Hanina said: The demon Jonathan told me: Demons have a shadow, but not the shadow of a shadow.[8]

Sorceries and Optical Illusion

46. Ten measures of witchcraft came down to the world. The Egyptians took nine, and the rest of the world, all of it, took one.[9]

47. R. Yohanan said: Why are sorcerers called mekhashefim? Because they diminish (makh'hishim) the power of the household (familia) above.

"There is no one beside Him" (Deut. 4:35). Even by means of sorcery, said R. Hanina, no one can stand up against Him.

When a woman sought to take earth from under R. Hanina's feet [in order to bewitch him], he said to her, "If you can do it, go and practice [your sorcery], but remember Scripture's admonition: 'There is no one beside Him.' "

But is that really so? Did not R. Yohanan say, "Why are sorcerers called mekhashefim? Because they diminish the power of the household above"? However, R. Hanina is different, because his merit is so abundant.[10]

48. A baal ov (Lev. 19:31) is a ventriloquist who speaks out of his armpit. The yiddeoni, "wizard" (ibid.), is one who puts a bone of the yiddoa[11] in his mouth and speaks out of this bone.[12]

49. Three things have been said about him who brings up a dead person: he who brings him up sees him but does not hear his voice; he who needs him hears his voice but does not see him; and he who does not need him neither sees him nor hears his voice.[13]

50. Our masters taught: A meonen[14] is, according to R. Simeon, one who applies the semen of seven species to his eyes [in order to perform witchcraft]. According to the sages, he is one who causes an optical illusion.[15] According to R. Akiva, he is one who calculates seasons and hours, and declares, "Today is propitious for setting out, tomorrow is propitious for making purchases; wheat ripening on the eve of a sabbatical year is generally sound; [instead of waiting for the usual harvest time], the beans should be pulled up to save them from becoming wormy."[16]

51. Our Masters taught: A menahesh is a diviner who announces, "So-and-so's bread has fallen out of his mouth," "His staff has fallen from his hand," "So-and-so has called him from behind," "A raven has screamed at him," "A dog has barked at him," "A deer has crossed his path," "A snake has passed at his right and a fox at his left." Or who says, "Do not start anything with me now—it is morning, it is the New Moon, it is the Sabbath's outgoing."

Our masters taught: "Ye shall not use divinations" (Lev. 19:26)—the kind of those who resort to divination by means of weasels, birds, fish, and stars.[17]

52. We have been taught: In the words "Or that consulteth the dead" (Deut. 18:11), Scripture refers to him who starves himself and then spends the night in a cemetery, so that an unclean spirit may rest upon him [to enable him to hear what the dead say]. Whenever R. Akiva reached this verse, he would burst into tears [and say]: If an unclean spirit does come to rest upon a person who fasts in order that it should do so, how much more and more should the desire be fulfilled of him who fasts in order that the pure spirit [the Divine Presence] rest upon him! But alas! Our sins have driven it away from us, as is written, "Your iniquities have been a barrier between you and your God" (Isa. 59:2).[1]

53. Rava said: If the righteous desired it, they could create a world.

Indeed, Rava created a man and sent him to R. Zera. When R. Zera spoke to him and received no answer, he said to him, "You are a creature of one of the sages. Return to your dust."

R. Hanina and R. Oshaia spent every Sabbath eve studying the Book of Creation, by means of which they created—and ate—a calf developed to one-third of its growth.[2]

54. "Then the magicians said unto Pharaoh, 'This is the finger of God' " (Exod. 8:15).[3] R. Eleazar said: This proves that a demon cannot create a creature smaller than a barleycorn. R. Papa said: By God! Even a creature as large as a camel he cannot create![4]

55. When two women sit at a crossroads, one on one side and one on the other, facing each other, it is clear that they are engaged in witchcraft. What is the remedy? If there is another road, let the traveler take it; if there is no other road, then, if another man is with him, let the two hold each other's hands and pass; if there is no other man, let the traveler say, "Agrat, Ozlat, Usia, Belusia have been slain with a dark[?] arrow."[5]

56. Yohani daughter of Retivi was a widowed witch. Whenever a woman's time to give birth had come, Yohani would shut the woman's womb by witchcraft. After the woman had suffered greatly, the witch would say, "I will go and implore [God's] mercy—perhaps my prayer will be heard." Then she went and undid her witchcraft, and the child emerged. Once, when she went to the house of a woman about to give birth, [leaving behind] in her own house a man hired by the day, the hired man heard the sound of witchery knocking about in a vessel, as an embryo is knocked about in its mother's womb. When he removed the vessel's stopper, the witcheries went out, and the child was born. Then all knew that the widow was a mistress of witchcraft.[6]

57. There is the story of R. Eliezer, R. Joshua, and Rabban Gamaliel, who went up to Rome and entered a certain place where they found children piling up small mounds and saying, "This is what the people of the Land of Israel do as they say, 'This is the heave offering, and this is the tithe.' " So the sages said: It is evident that there are Jews here. Then they went to another place where they stayed as guests of a certain man. When they sat down to eat, every course that was put before them was first taken into a small chamber. Afraid that they were about to eat sacrifices offered to deities that are no deities, they asked their host, "Why do you not bring us any course without first taking it into the small chamber?" Their host replied, "I have an old father who has imposed upon himself the resolution that he would not leave his small chamber until he saw the sages of Israel." So they said, "Go and tell him, 'Come out to them, they are here.' " When the father came out to them, they asked him, "What reason did you have for such a resolution?" He replied, "[I imposed this resolution upon myself out of grief for my son, who was waiting for the sages to come to pray in his behalf. Now that you are here], pray in behalf of my son, who is still childless." So R. Eliezer said to R. Joshua, "Now then, Joshua ben Hananiah, see what you can do." R. Joshua: "Bring me some flaxseed." Flaxseed was brought to him. He made as though he were sowing it on the tabletop, then as though he watered it, then as though the seed had sprouted, then as though the stalks had come up, and then as though he plucked the stalks, until finally [he made as though] he raised up a woman by the braids of her hair. He said to her, "Undo the spell you wove." She replied, "I will not undo it." R. Joshua: "If you do not undo it, I will make known what you are." The woman: "I can do nothing, since I threw my cords of witchery into the sea." R. Joshua then imposed a decree upon the prince of the sea, and he disgorged them. The three sages prayed in behalf of their host, and he was given the privilege of begetting R. Judah ben Betera. So the three sages said, "If we had come up to Rome only to help in begetting such a righteous man, it would have been enough for us."[7]

58. The more women, the more witchcraft.[8]

59. After R. Simeon ben Shetah was designated head of the Sanhedrin, some people came and told him, "There are eighty witches in a cave in Ashkelon, bent on destroying the world. On that day there was a heavy rainstorm. Still, R. Simeon ben Shetah arose at once, gathered eighty young men, and took them with him. He gave each one a new jug with a clean cloak folded up in it, and they placed the jugs upside down on their heads. Then R. Simeon said to them, "When I chirp the first time,[9] put on your cloaks. When I chirp a second time, all of you enter the cave together. After you enter, each one of you is to take one of the witches into his arms and lift her off the ground, for such is the way of a witch—once you lift her off the ground, she can do nothing at all."

Then R. Simeon went and stationed himself at the entrance to the cave, and called to the witches, "Oyim, oyim,[1] open for me, for I am one of you." They asked, "How did you manage to come here bone-dry at such a rainy hour?" He replied, "I walked between the raindrops." They: "What did you come to do here?" He: "To study and to teach, and to have each of you do what she knows." So one intoned whatever [incantation] she intoned and produced a loaf of bread; another intoned something else and produced a cut of meat; a third produced a cooked dish; and a fourth produced wine. Then they asked him, "And you, what can you do?" He said, "I can chirp twice and produce for you eighty young men wearing dry cloaks. They will find joy in you and will give joy to you." He chirped once, and the young men put on their cloaks. He chirped a second time, and all of them entered the cave together. R. Simeon said, "Let each select his mate." They picked them up, went out, and hanged them.[2]

60. Zeiri happened to go to Alexandria in Egypt, where he bought an ass. When he was about to give it water, it was released from its spell and turned back into a landing bridge. The vendors then said to him, "If you were not Zeiri, we would not return your money to you: [in this place of witchcraft], does anyone buy anything without first testing it by water?"[3]

Yannai came to an inn and said, "Give me a drink of water"; a woman offered him a drink of barley flour and honey. When he noticed that her lips were moving, he [covertly] spilled a little of it, and it turned into scorpions. He said, "As I have drunk of yours, now you drink of mine." So he gave her to drink, and she turned into a she-ass. He mounted her and rode to the marketplace. There her friend came and undid the spell [changing her back into human form], and Yannai was thus seen riding upon a woman in public.[4]

61. R. Ashi said: I saw Karna's father [a magician] blow his nose violently and eject streamers of silk from his nostrils.[5]

62. Rav said to R. Hiyya, "I saw an Arab take a sword and cut up his camel. Then he struck a tabor, and the camel stood up whole." R. Hiyya asked Rav, "Was there any blood or dung?" Rav: "No." R. Hiyya: "Since there was not, it must have been an optical illusion."[6]

63. R. Yannai said: I was once walking in the marketplace of Sepphoris, where I saw a heretic take a pebble and toss it upward, and when it came down, it had turned into a calf. But did not R. Eleazar say in the name of R. Yose bar Zimra, "If all the world's inhabitants assembled, they could not create a single gnat and cast the breath of life into it"? What really happened was that the heretic called to a trickster, who stole a calf from the flock and [covertly] brought it to him.

R. Hinena son of R. Hananiah said: I was walking in Nufta, near Sepphoris, and saw a heretic take a round stone and toss it upward; when it came down, it had become a calf. When I came back and told my father about it, he said: If you were able to eat it, it was real; if not, it was no more than an optical illusion.[7]

Whispered Charms and Smidry Kinds of Healing

64. Amemar related: The queen of witches said to me: He who meets witches should say, "May boiling excrement in a perforated basket [be forced] into your mouths, O witches! May your heads become bald, wind carry off the crumbs you [use in sorcery], your spices be scattered, and wind carry off the new saffron in your hands, O witches!"[8]

65. Our masters taught: The following three are not to pass between two [men], nor is one to pass between any two of them: a dog, a date palm, and a woman. Some say, also a pig. And some say, also a snake. If one did go between them, what is the remedy? R. Papa said: He should recite the two verses that begin with El ("God") and end with El,[9] or he should begin with a verse that starts with lo ("not") and end [with a verse that also starts with] lo.[10]

66. Resh Lakish said: If a man does one of the following four things, his bloodguilt is upon himself when he loses his life: if he relieves himself between a date palm and a wall, if he passes between two date palms, if he drinks borrowed water, or if he walks over spilt water, even if his own wife spilled it in his presence.[11]

67. R. Isaac said: To whom does the verse "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me" (Ps. 23:4) refer? To him who sleeps in the shadow of a single date palm or in a shadow [produced] by the moon.

Four kinds of shade [are haunted by demons]: the shade of a single date palm, the shade of a kinnara,[12] the shade of a caper, and the shade of thorny bushes whose fronds are made edible.[13] Some say, also the shade of a ship, and the shade of a willow. This is the general rule: Whatever has many branches, its shade is dangerous; and whatever has hard thorns, its shade is dangerous. The exception is the thorny bush whose fronds are made edible; its shade is not dangerous, even though its thorns are hard, for Shida [the female demon] said to her son, "Stay away from the thorny bush whose fronds are made edible, because that is the one that killed your father."

In a place of capers, there are spirits. In a place of thorny bushes with edible fronds, there are demons. On rooftops, there are fiery-bolt demons. What are the practical consequences? In the writing of an amulet [it is important to know the identity of the agent who caused the injury].

A thorny bush with edible fronds near a town is haunted by no fewer than sixty demons. What is the practical consequence? In the writing of an amulet [it is necessary to know the number of demons who caused the injury].

When the prefect of a certain city went and stood by a thorny bush with edible fronds near the city, he was set upon by sixty demons, and his life was in danger. So he went to a certain sage who did not know that it was a thorny bush with edible fronds haunted by sixty demons, and so he wrote a one-demon amulet for it. Then he heard the demons dancing in the tree and singing, "Though this sage's head scarf is like a sage's, we have examined him [and find] that he does not know how to make the blessing before putting on such a scarf." Then another sage came who knew that the cause was the thorny bush with edible fronds that is haunted by sixty demons, and he wrote a sixty-demon amulet for the prefect's injury. Then he heard the demons say, "Clear your vessels away from here."[1]

68. R. Ishmael ben Elisha said: Suriel, the prince of the [Divine] Presence, told me three things: when dressing in the morning, do not take your shirt from the hand of your attendant, do not let water be poured over your hands by one who has not already washed his own hands, and do not return a cup of wine brewed with asparagus to anyone save to the one who has handed it to you, because a company of demons—according to some, a band of destroying angels—lie in ambush for a man and say, "When will somebody come to do one of these things, so that we can trap him?"[2]

69. R. Joshua ben Levi said: The angel of death told me three things: when dressing in the morning, do not take your shirt from your attendant, do not let water be poured over your hands by one who has not already washed his own hands, and do not stand in front of women when they are returning from the presence of a deceased person, because, sword in hand, I go leaping in front of them, and have permission to do harm. If one should happen to meet such women, what is his remedy? He should remove himself a distance of four cubits; if there is a river nearby, let him cross it; if there is another road, let him take it; if there is a wall, let him stand behind it. If he cannot do any of these things, let him turn his face away and say, "The Lord said unto Satan, 'The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan,' " etc. (Zech. 3:2), until they have passed by.[3]

70. R. Assi said: No blessing is to be said over an unlucky cup. What is an unlucky cup? "The second [of two cups]," said R. Nahaman bar Isaac.[4]

71. He who drinks an even number of cups should not say grace.[5]

72. Our masters taught: He who drinks an even number of cups—his blood is upon his own head. R. Judah said: When is this so? Only when he does not step outside [between drinks]. But if he does step outside, he may drink an even number. R. Ashi said: I saw Hananiah bar Bebai step outside after each cup. However, what the sages meant is that drinking an even number of cups is harmful only when one is about to set out on a journey; when one intends to remain home, it is not harmful. R. Zera observed: And going to sleep is like setting out on a journey.

Ulla said: Ten cups are not subject to the danger in even numbers.

R. Joseph said: Joseph, the expert in ways of demons, told me: Ashmedai, king of demons, has charge of all matters concerned with even numbers, and it does not befit the dignity of a king to be called harmful. But some say: On the contrary, since a king has the power, he does whatever he wishes.

R. Papa stated: Joseph, the expert in ways of demons, told me [that demons say]: For two cups, we kill; for four, we do not kill—we only injure the drinker. For two cups, we kill, whether [drunk] unwittingly or deliberately; for four cups, only if drunk deliberately, but not if drunk unwittingly.

And if a man forgetfully drinks [an even number of cups] and goes out, what is his remedy? Let him take the thumb of his right hand with his left hand, and the thumb of his left hand with his right hand, and say, "You [two thumbs] and I surely are three!" But if he hears a voice say, "You [three] and I are surely four!" let him retort, "[Not so]—you and I are surely five!" And if he hears a voice say, "You and I are six!" let him retort, "[Not so]—you and I are seven." Once it happened that the drinker kept on counting until he reached one hundred and one, whereupon the demon disintegrated.[6]

73. In the west [the Land of Israel], they were not particular about even numbers. R. Dimi of Nehardea was particular even about an even number of marks on a [wine] cask. He became particular after a cask [with such a number] burst. This is the general rule: when a man is particular about such numbers, the demons are particular with him, and when a man is not particular about such numbers, the demons are not particular with him. Nevertheless, one should be cautious.[1]

74. R. Joseph said: The following three things take away a man's sight: combing one's head while the hair is dry, drinking the drippings [of wine], and putting on shoes while one's feet are still wet.[2]

75. Food suspended [from the ceiling] in a house brings on poverty, as people say, "He who suspends a basket [of food] puts his sustenance in suspense." Bran in a house brings on poverty. Crumbs in a house bring on poverty. A bowl covering the spout of a jug brings on poverty. He who drinks water out of a bowl is liable to get a cataract in his eye. He who eats cress without first washing his hands will live in fear for thirty days. He who undergoes bloodletting without first washing his hands will live in fear for seven days. He who trims his hair without first washing his hands will live in fear for three days. He who pares his nails without first washing his hands will live in fear for one day without knowing the cause of his fear. Putting a hand on one's nostrils is a step to fear. Putting a hand on one's forehead is a step to sleep.[3]

76. The sages taught: Even if covered by iron vessels, food and drink kept under a bed will have a baneful spirit rest on them.[4]

77. Our masters taught: A man must not drink water either on the night ushering in Wednesday or the night ushering in the Sabbath, and if he does drink, his blood is on his own head because of the danger. What danger? An evil spirit. But if he is thirsty, what is he to do? He should recite the verses in which "the voice of the Lord" occurs seven times,[5] verses that David uttered over the water, and then he may drink. But if [he does] not [say these verses], let him say, "Lul shafan anigeron anirdafon, I dwell among the stars, I walk among lean and fat people." If he does not say this, then, if there is another man with him, he should wake him up and say to him, "So-and-so son of So-and-so, I am thirsty for water," and then he may drink. But if there is no other man with him, he should knock the lid against the pitcher and then drink. But if [there is neither lid nor pitcher], he should throw something into the water and then drink.

Our masters taught: A man should not drink water from rivers or pools at night, and if he drinks, his blood is on his own head because of the danger. What danger? The danger of temporary blindness. But if he is thirsty, what should he do? If another man is with him, he should wake him up and say to him, "So-and-so son of So-and-so, I am thirsty for water." But if there is no other man with him, he should knock the lid against the pitcher and say to himself, "O So-and-so son of So-and-so, your mother told me, 'Beware of Shabriri'[6]—Shabiri, beriri, riri, iri, ri. I am thirsty for water in white cups.'"[7]

78. Ravina said: He who is frightened, even though he sees nothing—it is because his planet sees it. What is the remedy? He should recite the Shema, and if he stands in a place soiled with excreta [where the Shema may not be recited], he should remove himself a distance of four cubits from that place and say, "The he-goat at the butcher's is fatter than I."[8]

79. Our masters taught: Five things make man forget his learning: eating something of which a mouse or a cat has eaten, eating the heart of a beast, frequent consumption of olives, drinking waste bathwater, and washing one's feet one foot above the other. Some say: Also he who puts his clothes under his pillow [forgets his learning].

Five things improve one's learning: eating wheat bread—and much more so, wheat itself[9]—eating a roasted egg without salt, frequent consumption of olive oil, frequent indulgence in wine and spices, and drinking the water that is left from kneading [dough]. Some say, also dipping one's finger into salt and licking it.[10]

80. R. Yohanan said: While olives cause one to forget seventy years of study, olive oil restores seventy years of study.[11]

81. Ten things adversely affect one's capacity to learn: passing under a camel's bit—and all the more so, under the camel itself—passing between two camels, passing between two women, a woman passing beneath two men, passing within smelling distance of a [decaying] carcass, passing under a bridge beneath which no water has flowed for forty days, eating bread insufficiently baked, eating meat out of a soup ladle, drinking from a water channel that runs through a graveyard, and looking into the face of a dead body. Others say: He who reads the inscription on a grave is also [subject to the same disability].[12]

82. Abba Saul said in the name of R. Akiva: He who whispers an incantation over a wound, saying, "I will put none of the diseases upon thee which I have put upon the Egyptians; for I am the Lord that healeth thee" (Exod. 15:26), and then spits will have no portion in the world-to-come.[13]

83. [On the Sabbath], one may go out carrying a cricket's egg, a fox's tooth, or a nail from [the gallows of] an impaled convict as a means of healing. So said R. Meir. But the sages forbid such practices even on weekdays, as following "the ways of the Amorite."[1]

[On the Sabbath], one may go out carrying a cricket's egg to cure an ear discharge; a fox's tooth to cure sleep disorders—a live fox's tooth for excessive sleepiness, a dead fox's tooth for sleeplessness; and a nail from [the gallows of] an impaled convict to heal an inflammation.

Both Abbaye and Rava maintained: Whatever is effective as a remedy is not [forbidden] on account of "the ways of the Amorite."[2]

84. When R. Joshua ben Levi's grandson had an obstruction in his throat, a certain man came and whispered into his ear a spell in the name of [Jesus], the well-known heretic, and he began to breathe again. As the man was leaving, R. Joshua asked him, "What did you whisper in his ear?" The man: "Such-and-such a spell." R. Joshua: "It would have been better if my grandson died rather than recover by such means." And, "like an error which proceedeth from the mouth of a ruler [a ruler in matters of Torah]" (Eccles. 10:5), his thoughtless imprecation caused the death of his grandson.

It once happened to R. Eleazar ben Dama, the son of R. Ishmael's sister, that he was bitten by a snake, and Jacob of Kefar Sekhania[3] came to treat him in the name of Jesus son of Pandera,[4] But R. Ishmael did not allow him to. R. Eleazar ben Dama pleaded, "R. Ishmael, my brother, allow him to treat me—I can bring proof from the Torah that this is permitted." No sooner did he finish than his soul departed and he died. R. Ishmael exclaimed, "Happy are you, Ben Dama, that your body is pure, that your soul left you while you were in a state of purity, and that you have not breached the fence [the injunctions] of the sages who used to quote, 'He who breaketh through a fence, a serpent shall sting him' " (Eccles. 10:8).

But a snake did sting him [before he violated the words of the sages].

The verse refers to the "snake" [sting] of sages' words, for which there is no remedy.

What is the verse that R. Eleazar ben Dama should have quoted? It is "Keep My statutes . . . which if a man do, he shall live by them" (Lev. 18:5) and not die by them.[5]

85. Our masters taught: Demons may not be consulted on the Sabbath. R. Yose: This is forbidden even on weekdays.

It is permitted to consult by incantation the guardian spirits of oil and of eggs, but [sometimes] they give false answers.[6]

86. [On the Sabbath], boys may go out with kesharim. What are kesharim? The sages said in R. Judah's name: They are garlands of dyer's madder [used as a remedy].

Abbaye said: My [foster] mother told me that three such garlands halt an illness, five cure it, and seven are efficacious even against witchcraft. R. Aha bar Jacob observed: [That is so], provided the sick man does not look at the sun or the moon or at rain; does not hear the sound of iron, the cry of a fowl, or the sound of footsteps.[7]

R. Nathan bar Isaac said: [For all practical purposes], madder's dye—you may as well chuck it into a pit![8]

87. Avin bar Huna said in the name of Hama bar Guria: When a child yearns greatly for his father, the father should take a strap from his right shoe and tie it to the child's left arm.[9] It is dangerous to reverse the tying as prescribed.[10]

88. Abbaye said: My [foster] mother told me that all incantations which are repeated several times should mention the mother [of the one for whom the incantation is whispered]; and all straps must be tied on the left arm. All incantations should be repeated the prescribed number of times; and if the number has not been specified, the incantation shall be repeated forty-one times.[11]

89. Abbaye also said: My [foster] mother told me that for a daily fever one should take a new zuz coin, go to a salt deposit, take the zuz's weight in salt, and tie the salt inside the collar of his shirt with a band of twined strands of wool. If this remedy does not help, the patient should sit at a crossroads, and when he sees a large ant carrying something, he should take it, put it into a brass tube, close the tube's openings with lead, and seal it with sixty seals. He should shake it, lift it on his back, and say to it, "Your burden be upon me, and my burden be upon you." If this remedy does not help, he should take a new jar, small in size, go to the river, and say to it, "River, O river, lend me a jarful of water for a guest who happens to be visiting me." He should circle the jar seven times about his head, then pour its water behind his back and say to it, "River, O river, take back the water you gave me, for the guest who visited me came for a day and left the same day."[12]

90. R. Huna said: [As a remedy] for tertian fever, one should procure seven prickles from seven date palms, seven chips from seven beams, seven pegs from seven bridges, seven handfuls of ash from seven ovens, seven pinches of earth from seven graves, seven bits of pitch from seven ships, seven seeds of cumin, and seven hairs from the beard of an old dog, and tie them inside the collar of his shirt with a band of twined strands of wool.[13]

91. R. Yohanan said: For fever accompanied by shivering, one should take a knife made entirely of iron, go to a place where there is a thornbush, and tie to it bands of twined strands of wool. On the first day, he should make a slight notch in the bush and say, "The angel of the Lord appeared unto him. . . . And Moses said: . . . I will turn aside now . . . and see why the bush is not burnt" (Exod. 3:2–3). On the following day, he should make another small notch and say, "When the Lord saw that he turned aside to see" (Exod. 3:4). The next day, he should make a third small notch and say, "Draw not nigh hither" (Exod. 3:5). And when the fever has ceased, he should bend the bush and then cut it down as he says, "Thornbush, O thornbush, not because you are higher than all other trees in the field did the Holy One have His Presence abide upon you, but He had His Presence abide upon you because you are lower than all other trees in the field. And even as the fire fled Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah when it saw them, so may the "fire" that sees So-and-so son of So-and-so flee from him."[1]

92. For a rash, one should say, "Bazbaziah, Masmasiah, Kaskasiah, Sharlai, and Amarlai"—these are the angels who were sent out from the land of Sodom to heal those smitten with a rash—"Bazakh, Bazikh, Bazbazikh, Masmassikh, Kammon, Kamikh, your color is to remain what it is now, your color is to remain what it is now. Your place is to be confined to where it is now. Like one whose seed is locked up, or like a mule that is not fruitful and cannot increase, so may your seed not be fruitful nor increase in the body of So-and-so son of So-and-so.[2]

93. Against epilepsy, one should say, "A sword drawn, a sling stretched, its name is not to be Yukhav—'sickness and pain.' "[3]

94. Against a demon, one should say, "Even as you have been shut in, stay shut in. Cursed, shattered, and banished shall be Bar Tit, Bar Tamei, Bar Tina, Kashmaggaz, Merigaz, and Istamai."[4]

95. For the demon of the privy, one should say, "On the head of a lion and on the snout of a lioness did we find the demon Bar Shirikai Pandai; with a bed of leeks I felled him, and with the jawbone of an ass I smote him"[5]

96. If a man is seized by depression, what is the means of healing him? Red meat broiled over coals, and diluted wine.[6]

97. Abbaye said: My [foster] mother told me that the remedy for a fever on the first day is to drink a small pitcher of water; if the fever lasts two days, to let blood; if three days, to eat red meat broiled over coals and drink diluted wine. For continuing fever, a man should get a black hen, tear it lengthwise and crosswise, shave the middle of his head, put the hen on his head, and leave it there till it sticks fast; then he should go down [to the river] and stand in the water up to his neck until he is quite faint, and then he should take a dip and come up.

For fever [as already said], one should eat red meat broiled over coals and drink diluted wine. For a chill, one should eat fat meat broiled over coals and drink undiluted wine.[7]

98. For blood rushing to the head, a man should take bark of a box tree, a willow, a myrtle, an olive tree, a sea willow, and a cynodon, and boil them all together. Then he should pour three hundred cups [of the brew] on one side of his head and three hundred cups on the other side. If this remedy does not help, he should take white roses all of whose leaves are on one side of the stem, boil them, and pour sixty cups of the boiled roses on one side of his head and sixty cups on the other side of his head.[8]

99. For migraine, a man should take a woodcock and cut its throat with a white silver coin over the side of the head where the pain is concentrated, taking care that the blood does not blind his eyes. Then he should hang the bird on his doorpost, so that he can rub against it when he comes in and when he goes out.[9]

100. For a cataract, a man should take a seven-hued scorpion, dry it out in the shade, and mix two parts of ground kohl to one part of ground scorpion; then, with a paintbrush, apply three drops to each eye—no more, lest the eye burst.[10]

101. For night blindness,[11] a man should take a rope made of wool and with it tie one of his own legs to the leg of a dog, and children should rattle potsherds behind him, saying, "Old dog, stupid cock." He should collect seven pieces of raw meat from seven houses, place them [for a while] in a door socket, and then have [the dog] eat them over the ash pit of the town. After that, he should untie the rope, and people should say to him, "Blindness of So-and-so son of So-and-so, let go of So-and-so son of So-and-so, and instead seize the pupils of the dog's eyes."

For day blindness, a man should take seven milts from the insides of animals and roast them over a bloodletter's shard. And while the blind man sits inside the house, another man should sit outside, and the blind man should say to him, "Give me something to eat." The sighted man should reply, "Take and eat." After the blind man has eaten, he should break the shard; otherwise, the blindness will come back.[1]

102. To stop a nosebleed, a man should call a priest whose name is Levi and write "Levi" backward, or else call any other man and write backward, "I am Papi Shila bar Sumki," or else write, "The taste of the bucket in water of silver, the taste of the bucket in water of blemish." If this remedy does not help, he should take roots of clover, rope of an old bed, papyrus, saffron, and the red part of a palm branch, and burn them all together; then he should take a fleece of wool, twine it into two wicks, steep these in vinegar, roll them in the ashes, and put them into his nostrils. If this remedy does not help, he should look for a water channel running from east to west, stand astride it, pick up some clay with his right hand from under his left foot and with his left hand from under his right foot, twine two more fleeces of wool into wicks, rub these in the clay, and put them into his nostrils. If this remedy does not help either, he should sit under a drainpipe and have people bring water, and sprinkle it over him as they say, "Even as these waters will stop, so shall the blood of So-and-so son of So-and-so stop."[2]

103. To stop bleeding from the mouth, the blood should be tested by means of a wheaten straw. If the straw is softened, the blood comes from the lung and there is a remedy for that; if the straw is not softened, the blood comes from the liver, and there is no remedy for that.

If the blood comes from the lung, what is the remedy? He should take seven fistfuls of hashed beets, seven fistfuls of mashed leeks, five fistfuls of jujube berry, three fistfuls of lentils, a fistful of cumin, a fistful of string, and a quantity equal to all these of the ileum of a firstborn animal; then he should cook the mixture and eat it, washing it down with strong beer made during [the month of] Tevet.[3]

104. For a toothache, Rabbah bar R. Huna said: A man should take a whole head of garlic, grind it with oil and salt, and apply it on his thumbnail to the side where the tooth aches; but he must put a rim of dough around it, thus taking care that it does not touch his flesh, as it may cause leprosy.[4]

105. For catarrh in the head, a man should take gum ammoniac equal to the size of a pistachio nut, galbanum equal to the size of a walnut, honey cake, a spoonful of white honey, and a Mahozan natla[5] of clear wine, and boil them together; when the gum ammoniac comes to a boil, all the others have boiled enough. If this remedy does not help, he should take a quarter of a log[6] of milk of white goats, let it drip on three stalks of cabbage, and stir it with a stem of marjoram; when that stem comes to a boil, all the others have boiled enough. If even this remedy does not help, he should take the excrement of a white dog and knead it with balsam; but if he can possibly avoid it, he should not resort to eating the dog's excrement, as it disintegrates the limbs.[7]

106. For swelling of the spleen, a man should take seven water leeches and dry them in the shade, and every day drink two or three in wine. If this remedy does not help, he should take the spleen of a she-goat that has not yet had young, stick it inside an oven, stand by it, and say, "As this spleen has dried up, so may the spleen of So-and-so son of So-and-so dry up." If this remedy does not help, he should look for the corpse of a person who died on the Sabbath, take the corpse's hand, put it against his own spleen, and say, "As the hand of this one has dried up, so may the spleen of So-and-so son of So-and-so dry up."[8]

107. Abbaye said: He who is unsure of his virility should bring three small measures of thorny saffron, pound it, boil it in wine, and drink it. R. Yohanan said, "This is just what restored me to the vigor of my youth."[9]

108. Abbaye said: My [foster] mother told me: He who suffers from weakness of the heart should get meat from the right leg of a ram and dried cattle turd dropped during the month of Nisan—if he has no dried cattle droppings, he should get chips of willow—roast the meat over them, and eat it, and then drink diluted wine.[10]

109. Abbaye said: My [foster] mother told me: A six-year-old child stung on his birthday by a scorpion is not likely to live. What is a [possible] remedy? The gall of a white stork in beer. This is to be rubbed into the wound, and the rest should be given to the child to drink. A one-year-old stung on his birthday by a wasp is also not likely to live. What is a [possible] remedy? The bast of a date palm in water. This is to be rubbed into the wound, and the rest should be given to the child to drink.[11]

110. Samuel said: A [sword] wound is to be regarded as so dangerous that the Sabbath may be profaned for it. What is the remedy? To stop the bleeding, pepperwort in vinegar; to induce new growth of flesh, peelings of cynodon and the paring of a thornbush, or worms from a dunghill.[12]

111. R. Safra said: A berry-sized growth on the eye is an emissary of the angel of death. What is the remedy for it? Rue in honey or parsley in an inferior wine. In the meantime, a berry resembling it in size should be brought and rolled over it: a white berry for a white growth, and a black berry for a black growth.[13]

112. Rava said: A carbuncle is a forerunner of fever. What is the remedy for it? It should be snapped sixty times with the middle finger and then cut open crosswise and lengthwise. This should be done only if its head is not white; if its head is white, it is not dangerous.[1]

113. When R. Jacob was suffering from a fissure in the rectum, R. Ammi—some say, R. Assi—directed him to take seven grains from the purple alkali plant, wrap them up in the collar [of a shirt], tie around it a white wool thread, dip the poultice in white naphtha, burn it, and powder the fissure with the ashes. While preparing the poultice, he was to take kernels of the nut of a thornbush and apply their split side to the fissure. This should be done if the fissure is external. What should be done if it is internal? One should take some fat of a she-goat that has borne no young, melt it, and apply it within the anus. If this remedy does not help, one should take three melon leaves that have been dried in the shade, burn them, and powder the fissure with the ashes. If this remedy does not help, one should apply olive oil mixed with wax and cover the fissure with strips of linen in summer and cotton wool in winter.[2]

114. R. Abbahu had an earache. So R. Yohanan—some say, the sages in the house of study—instructed him: he should take the kidney of a hairless goat, cut it crosswise and lengthwise, put it over glowing coals, and pour the water that comes out of it—neither hot nor cold, but tepid—into the ear. If this remedy does not work, he should take the fat of a large scarab beetle, melt it, and let it drip [into the ear]. If this remedy does not work either, the ear should be filled with oil; then seven wicks should be made out of clover stalks, with a garlic stem and a woolen tassel attached to one end of each wick, and the wick set alight. The other end is placed inside the ear. The ear should be exposed to the fire, but care must be taken that there be no wind: each wick should be replaced by another when it is used up. If this remedy does not work, he should take tow of the danda plant [ceterach officinalis] that has not been combed and place it within the ear, and place the ear near the fire; but care should be taken that there be no wind. If this remedy does not work, he should take the tube of an old cane [that has been detached from the soil] for about a hundred years, fill it with rock salt, then burn it and apply the ashes to the sore part [of the ear].[3]

115. When R. Yohanan suffered from scurvy, he went to a Roman noblewoman, who prepared something for him on Thursday and Friday. What did she prepare for him? R. Aha son of R. Ammi said: The water of leaven, olive oil, and salt. R. Yemar said: Leaven itself, olive oil, and salt. R. Ashi said: The fat of a goose together with its wing. Abbaye said: I tried all of these without effecting a cure for myself, until an Arab recommended: "Take the pits of olives that have not grown to one-third of their size, burn them in fire on a new rake, and stick them to the inside of the gums." I did so and was cured.[4]

116. One attacked by jaundice should be fed the flesh of a donkey. One bitten by a mad dog should be fed the lobe of its liver. So said R. Matia ben Heresh. But the sages said: There is no healing whatever in such remedies.[5]

117. What causes a dog to go mad? Because women given to witchery have sported with it. So said Rav. Because an evil spirit rested on it. So said Samuel. What is the practical difference between the two opinions? [If the dog's madness is because an evil spirit rested on it], the dog must be killed by something thrown at him.[6]

We have been taught that Samuel's opinion is right: when the dog is killed, he should be killed only [at a distance], with something thrown at him. One against whom a mad dog rubs itself is in danger. One whom it bites will die.

"One against whom a mad dog rubs itself is in danger." What is the remedy? He should remove his garments and run. Once, in the marketplace, a mad dog rubbed itself against R. Huna son of R. Joshua. R. Huna removed his garments and ran, saying [later]: I applied to myself "Wisdom preserveth the life of him who hath it" (Eccles. 7:12).

"One whom such a dog bites will die." What is the remedy? Abbaye said: He should take the skin of a male hyena and write on it: I, So-and-so, the son of So-and-so, have written against you on the skin of a male hyena: "Kanti, kanti, kleros (some say, Kandi, kandi, kloros), God, God, Lord of hosts, Amen, Amen, Selah." Then he should remove his garments and bury them in a cemetery for twelve months. After that, he should take them out, burn them in an oven, and scatter their ashes at a crossroads. During those twelve months, when he drinks water, he should drink it only through a copper tube, lest he sees the demon's shadow and be endangered. The mother of Abba bar Martha, who is Abba bar Minyomi, made a gold [drinking] tube for her son.[7]

118. [As a remedy] for worms in the bowels, pennyroyal should be eaten. With what should it be eaten? With seven black dates. What causes worms in the bowels? Raw meat and water on an empty stomach, fat meat on an empty stomach, ox meat on an empty stomach, nuts on an empty stomach, or shoots of fenugreek eaten on an empty stomach and washed down with water. If there are no black dates, one should swallow white cress. If that does not help, he should fast, then fetch some fat meat, put it over glowing coals, suck out the marrow from a bone, and gulp down vinegar. Not vinegar, others say, because it affects the liver. If that does not help, he should procure the scrapings of a thornbush that were scraped from top to bottom—not from the bottom to the top, lest the worms issue through his mouth—and boil the scrapings in beer at twilight. The next day, he should hold his nose and make himself drink it. When he relieves himself, he should do so on the stripped parts of a date palm.[1]

119. As an antidote for drinking uncovered water,[2] [juice of the] shepherd's flute plant should be drunk. If that does not help, one should get five roses and five cups of beer, boil them together until the brew reduces to an anpak,[3] and drink it. The mother of R. Ahadboi bar Amni prepared [a potion of] one rose and one cup of beer for a certain man. She brought the mix to a boil and made him drink it. Then she lit the oven, swept it out [to cool it], placed a brick in it, and had him sit on it [to perspire], and the poison [of the snake's venom] oozed out of him [in a liquid the color of] a green palm leaf. R. Ivia suggested [as an antidote for uncovered water]: a fourth of a log[4] of milk from a white goat. R. Huna bar Judah said: He should obtain a sweet etrog, scoop it out, fill it with honey, set it over burning embers [to boil], and then eat it. R. Hanina said: [He should drink] some urine forty days old [as a remedy]: a barzina[5] of it for a wasp sting; a fourth of a log for a scorpion's sting; and half a log for uncovered water. A log [of urine] is effective even against witchcraft.[6]

120. He who swallows a [baby] snake should eat cuscuta with salt and run three mil. R. Shimi bar Ashi saw a man swallow a [baby] snake; he appeared to the man in the guise of a horseman and made him eat cuscuta with salt and run three mil before him, and the snake issued from the man rib by rib. Some say that R. Shimi bar Ashi himself swallowed a [baby] snake. Elijah [the Prophet] appeared to him in the guise of a horseman, made him eat cuscuta with salt and run three mil before him, and the snake issued from R. Shimi rib by rib.

He who is bitten by a snake should procure the embryo of a white she-ass, tear it open, and put it over him; provided, however, that the ass was not found to be suffering from a serious organic disease. A certain officer of Pumbedita was bitten by a snake. Now, there were thirteen white she-asses in Pumbedita; all were torn open, and each was found to be suffering from a serious organic disease. There was another she-ass on the outskirts of the city, but before they could go and bring it, a lion devoured it. Then Abbaye suggested, "Perhaps he was bitten by 'the snake of the sages,'[7] for which there is no cure." The people replied, "This is so, our master, for when Rav died, R. Isaac bar Bisna decreed that [in token of mourning], myrtles and palm branches should not be brought to a wedding feast to the sound of bells, yet this officer did go and bring myrtles and palm branches to a wedding feast [to the sound of bells]." So a snake bit him, and he died.

If a snake winds itself around a man, he should wade into water, put a basket over his head, and dislodge the snake—when the snake climbs up to the basket, he should shove the basket onto the water, go up out of the water, and get away [as fast as he can].

When a man is scented by a snake, if he has a companion with him, he should ride upon the companion's shoulders a distance of four cubits. If he has no companion, he should jump over a ditch full of water. If there is no ditch, he should ford a river. And at night he should place his bed on four casks and sleep [outdoors] under the vault of heaven. He should also bring four she-cats and tie them to the four legs of the bed, then scatter chips of wood all around, so that when the cats hear the sound of the snake coming [over the chips], they will devour it.

He who is chased by a snake should run toward sandy places.[8]

121. He who has a meatbone stuck in his throat should bring more of that kind of meat, place it on his head, and say, "One by one, go down, swallow; swallow, go down, one by one." If it is a fishbone, he should say, "You are stuck like a pin, locked up as in a cuirass. Go down, go down."[9]

122. A tree that loses its fruit should be painted red and loaded with stones. It is loaded with stones to lessen its strength;[10] and covered with red paint so that people who see it may implore [God's] mercy in the tree's behalf.[11]

The Ways of the Amorites and Omens

123. The following practices are [forbidden as] ways of the Amorites:[12] cutting the hair from ear to ear in the forepart of the head, and leaving the hair at the back [which is to be offered at puberty to an idol]; reviving a [dead] child by dragging it around in the cemetery; attaching a precious stone to the girdle above the thigh or a red thread to one's finger; counting pebbles while throwing them into the sea or into a river [and observing their manner of sinking for omens]. The aforementioned are ways of the Amorites.

Striking hips, clapping hands, and dancing before a fire [in order to extinguish it] are also ways of the Amorites.

If bread falls from a man's mouth and he says to another, "Give it back to me, lest the benefit from what I have eaten be lost to me"; if a man says, "Place a lamp on the ground [near the deceased], so that the deceased will be distressed," or, "Do not place a lamp on the ground, so that they will not be distressed"; if sparks fall from the lamp and a person says, "We will have guests today"—the aforementioned are ways of the Amorites.

If a person, as he begins a task, says, "Let So-and-so, whose hands are lucky, come and begin it," or, "Let So-and-so, whose feet are lucky, come and pass before us"—these, too, are ways of the Amorites.

Or when a person beginning work on a cask or a lump of dough says, "Let So-and-so, whose hands are blessed, come and begin it"—this is one of the ways of the Amorites. When one is in the room of a woman about to give birth and plugs [a hole in] the window with a thorn or ties iron around the legs of the bed or sets a table before her [for luck][1]—these, too, are ways of the Amorites. However, one may plug the window with a jar or a sheaf of grain, or place a bowl of water before the woman, or tie a hen in front of her for companionship—these are not [necessarily] Amorite ways.

A person who says, "Slaughter this cock who chants in the evening,"[2] or, "Slaughter this hen who clucks like a cock," or, "Make her eat a cock's comb, since she crows as though she were a male"—these are ways of the Amorites. If a person calls to a raven, "Scream," or to a she-raven, "Screech, and for my sake turn your tail as a sign for good"—these are ways of the Amorites. If one says, "Eat this date or this leaf of lettuce, so that you may remember me," or, "Do not eat it because it may cause cataracts"; or, "Sleep in the coffin intended for a dead person, so that you may see him in the night," or, "Do not sleep in the coffin intended for a dead person, lest you see him in the night"; or "Turn your undershirt inside out, so that you will have good dreams," or, "Do not turn your undershirt inside out, so as not to have dreams"; or, "Sit on the broom, so that you will dream good dreams," or, "Do not sit on the broom, so as not to have dreams"—all these are ways of the Amorites.

If one says, "Do not sit on the plow, so that the work will not become too hard for us," or "Do not sit on the plow, so that it will not break"—these are ways of the Amorites. But if he says it out of certain knowledge that the plow will break under the man's weight, it is permitted.

If one says, "Do not twist your hands behind your back, lest we be prevented from doing our work"—that is a way of the Amorites. If one drives a firebrand into a wall [to extinguish it] and says, "This!"—that is a way of the Amorites. But if he does it [to warn people] of the sparks, it is permitted. If one spills water in a public thoroughfare and says, "This!"—that is a way of the Amorites. But if he cautions passersby [so that they will not be drenched], it is permitted. If one throws iron into a cemetery and says, "This!"—that is a way of the Amorites. But if he does it to alert passersby, it is permitted. If one places a partly burned firebrand and [a rod of] iron under his head—that is a way of the Amorites. But if he puts the two there only to protect them [from thieves], it is permitted.

If a woman shouts at an oven that the bread being baked in it should not fall in, or puts chips of wood into the handles of a pot lest it should boil over, or spills some of the contents of the pot behind her back—these are ways of the Amorites. But chips of mulberry wood and slivers of glass may be put into a pot so that it will come to a boil quicker. The sages forbid slivers of glass because of the danger involved.

If a woman does a jig so that a sour-milk pudding may rise, or bids people to be still so that lentils may cook properly, or whistles so that rice may get cooked, or claps her hands for grits to cook—these are ways of the Amorites.

If a snake falls upon a bed and one says that the owner of the bed, who is poor, will become rich, or that the pregnant woman will bear a male child, or that the maiden will wed a distinguished man—such auguries are Amorites' ways.

If a woman about to set down [a chicken] for hatching says, "I must have a virgin do it," or, "I must strip naked to do it," or, "I must see to it that the chicken is set down with the left hand" or "with both hands"; or if one who, as he pays the [symbolic] coin to his bride, does so with both hands, or hands over the bill of divorcement with both hands; or if one says at the end of a meal, "Bring more food to the table [in sign of blessing]"—all these are ways of the Amorites.

If a woman uses eggs to attach herbs to a wall, covers them with plaster, and counts to seventy-one—that is a way of the Amorites.

If a woman puts chicks in a sieve or places pieces of iron between them—that is a way of the Amorites. If she does so to protect them from thunder or lightning, it is permitted.

If a man inquires of his walking stick, "Shall I go or not go?"—that is a way of the Amorites. Even though there is no proof for this interdict, there is an intimation of it in Scripture: "My people ask counsel at their stock, and their staff declareth unto them" (Hos. 4:12).

He who says [to one who sneezes], "May it be for healing"—that is a way of the Amorites. He who says [while gathering his crop], "All I have of this is really left over from last year's, for this year's crop yielded nothing"[3]—that is a way of the Amorites. He who says, "I will drink and leave some [for luck]"—that is a way of the Amorites. He who says, "No, no! [May such a thing not befall me!]"—that is a way of the Amorites. He who says, "Do not pass between the two of us, lest our affection for each other cease"—that is a way of the Amorites. But if such a request is made out of deference, it is permitted.[4]

124. The following practices are permitted: When a man begins a task, he may utter praise and thanks to Him who is everywhere. When he begins work on a cask or a lump of dough, he may pray that a blessing come into these and that a curse not come.

Wine and oil may be drawn through pipes in honor of grooms and brides with no concern that the Amorites observe this practice. There is the story that when Judah and Hillel, sons of Rabban Gamaliel, came to Cabul, the inhabitants of the city had wine and oil drawn for them through pipes.[1]

125. Our masters taught: A lump of salt may be placed in a lamp in order to make it burn brightly, and mud and potter's clay may be placed under [the oil in] a lamp to make the oil burn slowly.[2]

126. R. Levi said: He who resorts to augury will find that what he fears will come upon his own person. And the proof? "There is no (lo') augury in Jacob" (Num. 23:23), where the word lo', "no," is to be read lo, "on his own person."[3]

127. Ahavah son of R. Zera taught: He who does not resort to augury will be brought into a precinct that even ministering angels are not allowed to enter, as is said, "When there is no augury in Jacob . . . then inquiry will be directed [by the ministering angels] to Jacob . . . : 'What hath God done?' " (Num. 23:23).[4]

128. Rav said: All augury that is not like the augury of Eliezer, Abraham's servant,[5] or like the augury of Jonathan son of Saul[6] [each of whom relied on augury] is not [the kind of] augury [that is prohibited].[7]

129. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: Although the building of a house, the birth of a child, and the taking of a wife are not to be construed as auguries, they may be regarded as auspicious events.[8]

130. An omen is to be taken seriously.[9]

131. R. Ammi said: He who wishes to ascertain whether he will live through the year or not should, during the ten days between New Year's Day and the Day of Atonement, kindle a lamp in a house where there is no draft. If the light continues to burn, he may be certain that he will live through the year.

He who wishes to engage in business and wants to ascertain whether he will succeed or not should rear a cock; if it grows plump and handsome, he will succeed.

He who wishes to set out on a journey and wants to ascertain whether he will return to his home safely or not should stand in a dark house. If he sees the reflection of his shadow, he may be certain that he will return to his home safely. However, such a procedure is not desirable, for his courage may fail him, and in consequence he may meet with misfortune.

Abbaye commented: Now that it has been stated that omens are to be taken seriously, a man should regularly eat pumpkins, fenugreek, leeks, beets, and dates on New Year's Day.[10]

132. The sages taught in the name of R. Yose: A man should never give Satan the opportunity to open his mouth.[11]

133. Our masters taught: When dogs howl, the angel of death has come to the city. When dogs frolic, the prophet Elijah has come to the city. This is so, however, only when there is no bitch among the dogs.[12]

134. He who does badly in one town and does not go to another [to improve his situation] is among those who are not heeded when they cry out.[13]

135. One who takes sick should not speak of it the first day, lest his luck turn worse. After the first day, he may speak freely of his sickness.[14]

136. R. Isaac said: He who wishes to become wise should turn southward when praying; and he who wishes to become rich should turn northward when praying. Why think so? [In the Tabernacle], the table [symbol of plenty] is in the north[15] and the lampstand [symbol of wisdom] is in the south.[16] But R. Joshua ben Levi said: One should always turn in prayer to the south, for when one becomes wise, he is also likely to become rich, as is said, "Length of days is in [wisdom's] right hand; in her left hand are riches and honor" (Prov. 3:16).[17]

The Evil Eye

137. "And the Lord shall take away from thee all sickness" (Deut. 7:15). That is, said Rav, [take away] the evil eye.[18]

Rav's reason [for this interpretation] was the follow-

18. Rav takes the verse to mean that God will take away the cause of all sickness, namely, the evil eye.

ing: Rav went to a cemetery, did what he did[1] [to find out what caused the death of the people buried in it], and concluded: ninety-nine of them died because of the evil eye, and only one died in a natural way [the end of his days having come].[2]

138. R. Yohanan was in the habit of sitting at the gate of places where women went to immerse themselves, saying: When the daughters of Israel come up from their immersion, let them look at me and have children as handsome as I.[3]

The sages asked him, "Are you not afraid that you might be affected by the evil eye?" But he replied, "I am the progeny of Joseph, over whom the evil eye has no power, as is said, 'Joseph is a fruitful vine, a fruitful vine above the eye' "[4] (Gen. 49:22)." Hence, R. Yose son of R. Hanina said: [The proof of the immunity of Joseph's progeny is in] "Let them multiply like fish in the midst of the earth" (Gen. 48:16). Just as the fish in the sea are covered by water and the evil eye has no power over them, so the evil eye has no power over Joseph's progeny.[5]

139. The sages said in the name of Rav: One should not stand in his neighbor's field when the crop is fully grown.[6]

140. He who enters a city and is afraid of the evil eye should take hold of the thumb of his right hand with his left hand and the thumb of his left hand with his right hand, and say, "I, So-and-so son of So-and-so, come from the seed of Joseph, over whom the evil eye has no power." If he is afraid of his own evil eye, he should point [his thumb] toward the wall of his left nostril.[7]

CHAPTER THREE

Parables

1. A certain man owned a well-kept orchard which produced some luscious newly ripened figs. He appointed two watchmen to take care of it, one lame and the other blind. One day, the lame man said to the blind one, "I see some luscious early figs in the orchard. Come, put me upon your shoulder, and we will pick and eat them." So the lame watchman mounted the blind one's back and picked the figs, and the two ate them. Some time later, the owner of the orchard came and inquired, "Where are those beautiful early figs?" The lame watchman replied, "Have I feet to walk with?" The blind one replied, "Have I eyes to see with?" What did the owner of the orchard do? He mounted the lame watchman on the blind one's back and passed judgment against the two as though they were one.[1]

2. On a pitch-black night, a blind man was walking on a road with a torch in his hand. When he was asked, "What use is a torch to you?" he replied, "As long as the torch is in my hand, people see me and save me from pits, thorns, and briers."[2]

3. A man had two wives, one very young and the other of advanced years. The young one used to pluck out his white hair, while the old one used to pluck out his black hair—in the end he became quite bald.[3]

4. There were two men: one had a mound in the middle of his field, while the other had a ditch in the middle of his field. The owner of the mound said, "Who will sell me that ditch?" The owner of the ditch said, "Who will sell me that mound?" One day, the two met, and the owner of the ditch said to the owner of the mound, "Sell me your mound." The other replied, "Would that such a request had been made long ago! Take it for nothing."[4]

5. A king became angry at his son and, noticing a large stone before him, swore that he would hurl it at his son. But then the king changed his mind, saying, "If I hurl it at my son, his life will end. Still, it is impossible to nullify my oath." What did the king do? He ordered that the stone be broken up into small pebbles and that these be thrown at his son one by one. Thus, the king spared his son and yet kept his royal oath.[5]

6. A man walked into a garden, gathered some mulberries, and ate them. The owner of the garden ran after him and asked, "What do you have in your hand?" The man: "I have nothing in my hand." The owner: "But aren't your hands stained?"[6]

7. A stag grew up in the wilderness and on his own joined a shepherd's flock. The shepherd not only gave him food and drink but loved him more than the other animals in his flock. He was asked, "How is it that you love the stag more than any in the flock?" He replied, "I had to perform many kinds of labor for my flock. I took them out in the morning and brought them back in the evening, until they grew up. But this one [I did not have to labor over]—he grew up in the wilderness and forests, and came on his own into my flock. Should I not love him more?"[7]

8. As a lion was devouring his prey, a bone stuck in his throat. So he said, "I shall give a reward to anyone who comes and removes it." An Egyptian heron, which has a long beak, came along, stuck his beak into the lion's mouth, pulled out the bone, and demanded, "Give me my reward." The lion roared, "Off with you! Go boast, 'I entered a lion's mouth in peace and came out in peace.' There can be no greater reward for you than that."[8]

9. A fox was walking on a river bank and, seeing schools of fish swimming here and there, asked them, "From whom are you fleeing?" They replied, "From the nets and traps set for us by men." So the fox said to them, "How would you like to come up on dry land, so that you and I could live together, the way my ancestors lived with yours?" They replied, "You—the one they call the cleverest of animals—are in fact a fool. If we are fearful in the place where we can stay alive, how much more fearful would we be in a place where we are sure to die!"[9]

10. A lion became angry at all beasts, wild and tame. So they said, "Who will go and pacify him?" The fox spoke up: "Come with me to him. I know three hundred parables with which to pacify him." They replied, "Let's go." After walking a short distance, he stopped. So they asked him, "What is the matter?" The fox: "I forgot a hundred parables." They: "There is ample power for good in two hundred." He walked a little farther and stopped again. They again asked, "What is the matter?" The fox: "I forgot another hundred." They: "There is ample power for good even in a hundred parables." When they were nearing their destination, he said, "I forgot them all. Each one of you—go and pacify the lion in your own behalf."[1]

11. A lion, some other beasts, and a fox, were about to sail on a ship. The ass was collecting the fare for the journey, saying to each animal, "Pay me the fare." The fox said to the ass, "How dare you! You know that the king of beasts is with us, and yet you demand the fare." The ass replied, "I collect the fare, even from the king, and I deposit the proceeds in the king's treasuries." [Upon hearing these words], the lion ordered, "Bring the ship to." He then got off, ripped the ass apart, and told the fox, "Lay out the parts of this fool's carcass for me [to dine on]." The fox laid them out. But when he saw the ass's heart, he ate it up. When the lion came back and saw all the parts cut up, he asked, "Where is the fool's heart?" The fox replied, "My lord king, he had no heart.[2] If he had had one, he would not have presumed to collect the fare from the king."[3]

12. The lion gave a feast to all animals, wild and tame, and provided a pavilion for them out of lions' skins. After they had eaten and drunk, they said, "Who will compose an appropriate verse for our entertainment?" and looked to the fox. He asked, "Will you respond ['Amen'] to what I am about to say?" They: "Yes." The fox lifted his eyes toward the skins above and said, "May He who has shown us what happened to those above show us what is to happen to the one below."[4]

13. A story: The fox said to the wolf, "Go into a Jewish courtyard on a Sabbath eve and help them prepare whatever is needed for the meal, and you will eat with them on the Sabbath." But when the wolf was about to enter, the courtyard's residents banded together against him with clubs.

Then the wolf was set on killing the fox, but the fox said, "They beat you only because of your father, who on one occasion helped them prepare a meal and then devoured every luscious morsel." The wolf: "Should I be beaten up because of my father?" The fox: "Yes—'fathers eat sour grapes, and their children's teeth are blunted' [Ezek. 18:2]. But come with me, and I will show you a place where you can eat your fill." The fox led the wolf to a well. Across the well's mouth was a beam with a rope wound over it. At each end of the rope was tied an empty bucket. The fox climbed into the upper bucket, and his weight caused it to plunge downward, while the lower bucket flew upward. The wolf called down to him, "Why did you go down there?" The fox: "Because here there is meat and cheese enough to eat one's fill," and he pointed to the moon's reflection in the water. It looked like a round cheese. The wolf: "How am I to go down?" The fox: "Climb into the upper bucket." The wolf did so, and his weight caused it to plunge down, while the bucket with the fox flew up. The wolf: "How am I to get up again?" The fox: " 'The righteous is delivered out of his trouble, and the wicked cometh in his stead' [Prov. 11:1]. Is it not written, 'Just balances, just weights' (Lev. 19:36)?"[5]

14. A fox found a vineyard that was fenced in on all sides, except for one narrow gap through which he tried to enter but could not. What did he do? He fasted for three days, until he became lean and slender, and thus got through the gap. But then, after he ate [his fill of the grapes], he became fat again, so that when he tried to leave through the same gap, he could not. He again fasted three days, until he once more became lean and slender; thus having returned to his former size, he was able to leave. He turned his face back to the vineyard, and gazed at it, said, "O vineyard, vineyard, how good are you, and how good is the fruit within you! All that is within you is beautiful and comely. But what benefit can one derive from you? As one goes into you, so must one come out."[6]

15. A certain man had a filly, a she-ass, and a sow. He measured out fodder to the she-ass and the filly, but let the sow eat as much as she wanted. The filly complained to the she-ass, "What is the idiot doing? To us, who do the work of the master, he rations food, but to the sow, who does nothing, he gives as much as she wants." The she-ass replied, "The time will come when you will see that she is stuffed with fodder not out of deference to her but to her own harm." When the Roman Calends[7] came, they took the sow and stuck her.[8]

16. A she-bear adorned with precious stones and pearls was standing in the marketplace. People said, "Whoever jumps her will get what she has on." A knowing man who was there said, "All you can see is what she is adorned with, but I see her fangs."[9]

17. A man walking on a road saw a pack of dogs and felt afraid of them, so he sat down in their midst.[10]

18. Two dogs watching a flock were jealous of each other. But when a wolf came and attacked one of them, the other said to himself: If I do not help, the wolf will kill him today, and tomorrow he will have a go at me! So both dogs went at the wolf and killed him.[11]

19. When a pig crouches, it displays its cloven hoof, as if to say, "See how kosher I am!"[12]

23. A bird made its nest at the edge of the sea, only to have it swept away when the tide rose. What did the bird do? It proceeded to take into its beak water from the sea and pour it out on the dry land, then take sand from the dry land and drop it into the sea. His companion stopped to watch, then asked, "What are you doing, wearing yourself out like this?" The bird answered, "I will not budge from here until I turn the sea into dry land and the dry land into sea." His companion said, "You are the biggest fool in the world! After all this effort, what do you think you can accomplish?"[4]

24. A bird was confined in a cage. Another bird flew up, perched above the caged one, and said, "How happy you must be that your food is provided for you." The bird in the cage responded, "Bad luck to you! All you see is the food; you don't see the bars on the cage."[5]

25. A dove pursued by vultures and ravens managed to flee from them and reach her nest, where she settled in. Some people were saying, "Those eggs must have been sired by a vulture"; others said, "Those eggs must have been sired by a raven." One person spoke up: "As long as they are eggs, it cannot be known whether they are the raven's or the vulture's. Wait until the dam hatches them and they become chicks; then you will know whose they are."[6]

26. A heron used to sing in the house of his master. While he sat and dined, the heron would sing. Presently the master brought a young hawk into the house. When the heron saw it, he fled under the bed, hid himself, and would no longer open his mouth. The master came in to dine and asked a member of his household, "Why doesn't the heron sing?" He was told, "Because you brought a young hawk in on him, he has ceased to sing out of fear. Remove the young hawk, and the heron will sing again."[7]

27. Why does the raven move about by hopping? Because one time the raven saw a dove moving about in a manner more beautiful than that of any other bird. The dove's movement was so appealing to the raven that he said to himself: I will move about like the dove. He all but broke his bones in his endeavor to do so, and the other birds made fun of him. Put to shame, the raven decided: I will return to my previous manner of moving about. When he tried to return to it, he could not, because he had forgotten his previous manner of moving. So he became a creature that hops—he could manage neither his previous nor his latter way of moving about.[8]

28. A bird hunter caught a bird and was about to catch a second when that bird perched itself on a king's statue. At this, the hunter stood still, perplexed, and said to himself: If I throw stones at her, I will forfeit my life, and if I try poking at her with my stick, I am afraid I might strike the king's image. I don't know what to say to you, [birdie], except that you fled to a perfect place and made good your escape.[9]

29. A cock and a bat were both waiting for the dawn. The cock said to the bat, "I am waiting for dawn, because dawn is mine [to announce]. But of what use is the dawn to you?"[10]

30. The serpent's tail said to his head, "How much longer will you go first? Let me go first." The head: "Go!" The tail went ahead, but when it got to a water hole, it flung the serpent's head into the water. When it got to fire, it flung the serpent's head into the fire. When it came to thorns, it flung the serpent's head into their midst. What caused the serpent such mishaps? Allowing his head to follow his tail.[11]

31. A man saw an insect that looked like a live coal—what we call a firefly—and it terrified him. He was asked, "Is this what terrifies you? At night it is a fiery, blazing thing, but when morning comes, you can see it is nothing more than a worm."[12]

32. Straw, stubble, and chaff were disputing with one another, one saying, "The field was sown for my sake," and another saying, "The field was sown for my sake." [Overhearing them], the ear of wheat retorted, "Wait till harvest time comes and we will know for whose sake the field was sown." When harvest time came, the owner proceeded to winnow the crop. The chaff was scattered before the wind; the owner threw the straw on the ground; he burned the stubble. But he took the wheat and piled it up in a heap—and everyone who passed by kissed it.[13]

33. The tares said to the wheat, "We are more comely than you, even though the rain comes down on you and on us, and the sun shines for both of us." The wheat replied, "It is not what you say, nor what we say. The fact is that when the winnower comes, he will set us aside for the storehouse, and you [will be thrown] as food for birds."[1]

34. A myrtle and a wild rose grew side by side. But when they grew up, the myrtle yielded its characteristic fragrance [reho] and the rose its thorns (hoho).[2]

35. A king had an orchard planted with a row of fig trees, a row of grapevines, a row of pomegranate trees, and a row of apple trees. He turned it over to a keeper and went away. After a while, the king came back, looked into the orchard to see how it was doing, and found it overgrown with thorns and briers. He was about to bring woodcutters to cut down the orchard, but when he looked closely at the thorns, he saw among them a rose-colored lily. He picked it up and breathed in its fragrance, and his spirit was calmed. The king said: Because of this lily, let the entire orchard be spared.[3]

36. A reed grows in a well-watered area. Its stock keeps driving up young shoots, and, because its roots are many, even if all the winds of the world come and blow at it, they cannot uprooot it from its place, swaying as it does in harmony with them. When the winds subside, the reed resumes its erect stance.

The cedar does not grow in a well-watered area. It does not drive up new shoots, and its roots are few. Still, even if all the winds of the world come and blow at it, they cannot move it from its place. However, when the [hot] south wind blows at the cedar, it immediately uproots it and throws it flat on its face.[4]

37. The other rivers asked the Euphrates, "Why do you not make your voice more audible?" The Euphrates: "I don't need to—my deeds make me known. When a man plants a sapling at my side, it matures in thirty days; when he sows a vegetable at my side, it is full grown in three days." Then the rivers asked the Tigris, "Why is your voice so audible?" The Tigris: "I wish my voice could be heard even more, so that I might be noticed."

When the trees that bear fruit were asked, "Why is your voice not very audible?" they replied, "We have no need—our fruits bear witness for us." When the trees that do not bear fruit were asked, "Why is your voice so audible?" they replied, "We wish our voices could be heard even more, so that we might be noticed."[5]

38. "As the crackling of thorns under a pot" (Eccles. 7:6). When all other kinds of wood are kindled, their sound is not heard. But when thorns are kindled, their sound crackles forth, as if to say, "We, too, are wood."[6]

39. When iron was created, the trees began to tremble. The iron said to them, "Why are you trembling? Let no piece of your wood become part of me, and not one of you will be harmed."[7]

CHAPTER FOUR

A MISCELLANY

Series of Matters Set Forth by Number

1. Three love one another: proselytes, slaves, and ravens.[1]

2. A man has three friends: his children, his possessions, and his good deeds.[2]

3. There are three wrongs before which the curtain [of heaven] is never closed: cheating, robbery, and idolatry.[3]

4. Three should not be provoked: a young Gentile, a young snake, and a humble pupil. Why not? Because, though they are still wet behind the ears, their rise to power is likely [if not certain].[4]

5. Three will not see Gehenna's face: they who undergo the torments of poverty, they who are sick in their bowels, and they who are hounded by the authorities. Some say, also he who has a bad wife.[5]

6. Three come unawares: the Messiah, something found, and a scorpion.[6]

7. The road does three things: it wears out one's clothing, grinds down one's body, and diminishes one's money.[7]

8. Three organs are under man's control: the mouth, the hands, and the feet. Three are not under his control: the eyes, the ears, and the nose.[8]

9. The prolonging of three acts prolongs a man's days and years: prolonging the Tefillah, prolonging his stay at the table, and prolonging his stay in the privy.[9]

10. Three things nullify an evil decree: prayer, charity, and repentance.[10]

11. Three things deplete a man's strength: fear, travel, and sin.[11]

12. Three things the Holy One Himself proclaims: famine, plenty, and a good leader.[12]

13. Three things take away man's reason and belief in his Creator: idolatry, an evil spirit, and the torments of poverty.[13]

14. Three things are said about finger- and toenails: he who burns them is a pious man, he who buries them is a righteous man, and he who throws them away is a wicked man.[14]

15. Three things were given as a gift to the world: Torah, rain, and the luminaries.[15]

16. Three things were given conditionally: The Land of Israel, the Temple, and the royal house of David.[16]

17. There are three things God reluctantly thought of, but even if He had not thought of them, they had to be thought of: that a corpse give off a stench, that a dead person be put out of mind, and that produce rot.[17] Some say, also that coins be accepted everywhere.[18]

18. There are three things whose sound goes from one end of the world to the other, and though mortals are in between, they are not aware of it: the sound of the day['s sun revolving on its course], the [sound of] rain[clouds moving across the firmament], and the sound of the soul when it leaves the body.[19]

19. Three things are grave threats to the body: heart disease, disease of the bowels, and an empty purse—which is a graver threat to the body than the preceding two.[20]

20. There are three things of which a large quantity and a small quantity are bad, while a moderate quantity is good: leaven, salt, and refusal of an invitation. At first one should decline, then one should hesitate, but finally one should eagerly accept.[21]

21. Three things are equal in importance: the earth, rain, and man. And [in the Hebrew] each of these words is made up of three letters.[1] This should teach you that if there were no earth, there would be no rain; if there were no rain, the earth would not endure; and if there were neither, man could not exist.[2]

22. Three the Holy One loves: him who does not succumb to anger, him who does not get drunk, and him who does not insist on his full rights.[3]

23. For three the Holy One weeps every day: for him who could occupy himself with Torah but does not; for him who cannot occupy himself with Torah, yet does; and for a leader who lords it over the community.[4]

24. Three the Holy One hates: him who says one thing with his mouth while another is in his heart, him who possesses evidence in his neighbor's favor but does not testify for him, and him who sees something indecent in his neighbor and appears as the only witness against him.[5]

25. Three have returned to the place where they first came into being: Israel,[6] Egypt's money,[7] and the script of the Tablets.[8]

26. There are three whose life is no life: he who has to rely on his neighbor's table, he whose wife rules him, and he whose body is racked by suffering. And some say, also he who owns only one shirt.[9]

27. There are three whose life is no life: those who are [too] compassionate, those who are too prone to anger, and those who are [too] fastidious.[10]

28. Suffering is divided into three portions: the patriarchs and all the generations of men took one, the generation that lived in the time of [Hadrian's] persecution took one, and the lord Messiah will take one.[11]

29. There are three kinds of magnetism in the world: the magnetism of a place for its inhabitants, the magnetism of a wife for her husband, and the magnetism of an article in the estimate of its purchaser.[12]

30. There are three who gather strength as they get older: a fish, a snake, and a pig.[13]

31. There are three crowns: the crown of Torah, the crown of priesthood, and the crown of royalty. But the crown of a good name surpasses them all.[14]

32. There are three whose sins are forgiven: the proselyte, the one who rises to an important office, and the one who weds a wife.[15]

33. There are three concerning whom the Holy One makes proclamation every day: the bachelor who lives in a large city but does not succumb to sin, the poor man who returns a lost article to its rightful owner, and the rich man who tithes his produce in privacy.[16]

34. There are three who will inherit the world-to-come: he who lives in the Land of Israel, he who brings up his sons to the study of Torah, and he who recites the Havdalah blessing over wine at the Sabbath's outgoing.[17]

35. Three bear witness in behalf of one another: the Holy One, Israel, and the Sabbath.[18]

36. Three things have something of the world-to-come: the Sabbath, the sun, and sexual intercourse.[19]

37. In the hand of the Holy One, there are three keys that no creature—neither an angel nor a seraph—can take possession of: the key to rain, the key to the womb, and the key [to the grave] at the resurrection of the dead.[20]

38. Three things increase a man's self-esteem: a beautiful dwelling, a beautiful wife, and beautiful appointments.[21]

39. Three things restore a man's spirit: [beautiful] sounds, [beautiful] sights, and [beautiful] fragrances.[22]

40. Three take in abundance and give in abundance: the earth, the sea, and the [Roman] government.[23]

41. There are three insolent ones: Israel among the nations, a dog among beasts, and the cock among fowls.[24]

42. Three cry and receive no response [from a court on earth or in heaven]: he who has money and lends it without witnesses, he who acquires a master for himself, and he whose wife rules him.[1]

43. There are three things for which one entreats [God's] mercy: a good king, a good year, and a good dream.[2]

44. Three require watching: a sick person, a groom, and a bride. Some say, also a disciple of the wise at night.[3]

45. Three sounds go from one end of the world to the other: the sound of the sun's orb, the sound of Rome's tumult, and the sound of the soul when it leaves the body. Some say, also the sound of childbirth. The sages entreated mercy for the soul when it leaves the body and had the sound [of its anguish] stopped.[4]

46. Three things are hard to take when excessive, but just right in limited measure: leaven, salt, and declining an invitation.[5]

47. Three men made requests in careless language: two were answered favorably and one unfavorably. The three: Abraham's servant Eliezer, Saul son of Kish, and Jephthah the Gileadite. As to Abraham's servant Eliezer, he requested, "So let it come to pass, that the damsel to whom I shall say: Let down thy pitcher, I pray thee, that I may drink . . . Thou hast appointed for Thy servant, even for Isaac" (Gen. 24:14), a request that could have included a lame or blind damsel. However, he was answered favorably in that Rebekah came out to meet him. As to Saul son of Kish, it was requested in his behalf, "And it shall be, that the man who killeth Goliath, the king will enrich him with great riches, and will give him his daughter, and make his father's house free in Israel" (1 Sam. 17:25), a request that might have included a slave or a bastard. However, he was answered favorably in that David came forth. As to Jephthah the Gileadite, he requested, "Then it shall be, that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, it shall be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering" (Judg. 11:31), a request that might have included an unclean creature [unfit for an offering]. And, indeed, he was answered unfavorably in that his own daughter came out of his house.[6]

48. Three hate one another: dogs, cocks, and Parsee priests. Some say, also harlots. And others say, also disciples of the wise in Babylonia.[7]

49. A man is called by three names: one given him by his father and mother, one that others call him, and one that [through his deeds] he causes himself to be called by.[8]

50. There are three partners in man's making: the Holy One, his father, and his mother.[9]

51. One man differs from his fellow in three ways: in voice, in appearance, and in understanding.[10]

52. A man's true character may be recognized by three things: his tippling, his tipping, and his temper. Some say, also by what makes him titter.[11]

53. In three instances [a man is apt to die because] Satan is ready to bring charges against him: when he lives in a house on the verge of collapsing, when he walks on a road alone, or when he sets out on the Great [Mediterranean] Sea.[12]

54. For three reasons one should not enter a dilapidated house: because of suspicion [of lewdness], because of its possible collapse, and because of demons.[13]

55. The world stands on three things: on Torah, worship, and loving-kindness.[14]

56. The world endures because of three things: justice, truth, and peace.[15]

57. Three may be called virgin: a human virgin, virgin soil, and a virgin sycamore tree.[16]

58. Three good gifts—Torah, the Land of Israel, and the world-to-come—the Holy One bestowed on Israel, and they were bestowed only through suffering.[17]

59. Three endowments [wisdom, strength, and wealth] were created in the world. He who acquires any one of them may be said to have acquired [the most precious] thing in the world. If he acquires wisdom, he has attained everything. If he acquires strength, he has attained everything. If he acquires wealth, he has attained everything. When is this so? When they are endowments from Heaven and come to one through the power of Torah. But strength and wealth originating in mortals are worth nothing.[18]

60. Not a day does a man escape three transgressions: unchaste thoughts, inattention during prayer, and slander.[1]

61. There are three kinds of torpor: the torpor of sleep, the torpor of prophecy, and the torpor of unconsciousness.[2]

62. Four are hard to put up with: a poor man who is proud, a rich man who falsely denies a claim against him, an old man who is lecherous, and a leader who [without justification] lords it over his community. Some say, also he who divorces his wife, [remarries her], divorces her again, and then marries her again.[3]

63. The Holy One showed Abraham four things—Gehenna, [the yoke of] the [heathen] kingdoms, the giving of Torah, and the Temple—and said to him: If your children are deeply occupied with the latter two, they will be saved from the former two.[4]

64. Four things tear up a [divine] decree issued against a man: charity, supplication, a change of name, and a change of conduct. Some say, also a change of residence.[5]

65. Four things drain a man's strength: iniquity, wayfaring, fasting, and the [Roman] Empire.[6]

66. Four are regarded as if dead: a poor man, a leper, a blind man, and a man who has no children.[7]

67. Four the Holy One regrets having created: exile, Chaldeans, Ishmaelites, and the impulse to evil.[8]

68. Four are called scoundrel: he who raises his hand against a neighbor to strike him, even though he does not strike him; he who borrows and does not repay; he who is brazen-faced; and he who is given to quarreling.[9]

69. Four things need to be done with vigor: study of Torah, good deeds, prayer, and one's daily task.[10]

70. Four are required to give thanks: they who have gone down to the sea, they who have journeyed through the desert, he who had been ill and has recovered, and he who had been confined in prison and has been released.[11]

71. Five things are a sixtieth of something else: fire, honey, Sabbath, sleep, and a dream. Fire is one-sixtieth of Gehenna; honey, one-sixtieth of manna; Sabbath, one-sixtieth of the world-to-come; sleep, one-sixtieth of death; a dream, one-sixtieth of prophecy.[12]

72. Five possessions the Holy One declared as His very own in His world: Torah is one such possession; heaven and earth are one such possession; Abraham is one such possession; Israel is one such possession; the Temple is one such possession.[13]

73. A man enjoys the fruits of six things in this world, while the principal reward abides for him in the world-to-come: hospitality to wayfarers, visiting the sick, concentration during prayer, early attendance at the house of study, rearing one's sons in the study of Torah, judging a neighbor on the scale of merit.[14]

74. Seven things are hidden from man: no man knows the day of [his] death, the day of [Israel's] comforting, the ultimate truth in divine judgments, what is in his neighbor's heart, what he will earn, when the sovereignty of the house of David will return, or when the kingdom of Edom will collapse.[15]

75. Seven things were created before the world was created: they are Torah, repentance, the Garden of Eden, Gehenna, the throne of glory, the Temple, and the name of the Messiah.[16]

76. Seven are as if under Heaven's ban: a man who has no wife, who has a wife but no children, who has children but does not rear them in the study of Torah; who has no tefillin on head and arm, no fringes on his garment, no mezuzah at the entrance to his house; and who denies shoes to his feet. Some say, also he who never participates in a company gathered for a religious purpose.[17]

77. Eight things are harmful in large quantities, but in small quantities are beneficial: travel, sexual intercourse, wealth, gainful trade, wine, sleep, hot baths, and cupping.[18]

78. Ten things serve the soul: the gullet for food, the windpipe for voice, the liver for temper, the lungs to absorb liquids, the first stomach to grind food, the spleen for laughter, the maw for sleep, the gall bladder for jealousy, the kidneys for thought, and the heart for decision-making. And above all these is the soul.[19]

Sundry Matters

79. Hillel used to say: An empty-headed person does not dread sin, an ignorant one [am ha-aretz] cannot be pious, one who is too bashful [to ask questions] cannot learn, an irritable man cannot teach, and he that is engrossed in trade cannot become a sage; and where there are no men, strive to be a man.[1]

80. He used to say: The more flesh, the more worms; the more property, the more worry; the more wives, the more witchcraft; the more female slaves, the more lewdness; the more male slaves, the more thievery; the more Torah [study], the more life; the more schooling, the more wisdom; the more counsel, the more understanding; the more charity, the more peace. He who has acquired a good name has acquired something truly his own; he who has acquired for himself words of Torah has acquired for himself life in the world-to-come.[2]

81. R. Hanina ben Hakinai said: He who, while awake at night or while walking alone on a road, turns his heart to that which is idle forfeits his life.[3]

82. R. Dosa ben Korkinas said: Morning sleep, wine at noon, children's chatter, and attending the meeting places of the ignorant [amme ha-aretz] put a man out of the world.[4]

83. R. Eleazar of Modim said: He who profanes things sacred, who scorns the festivals, who causes his fellow man to go pale with shame in public, who nullifies the covenant [circumcision] of Abraham our father, who misinterprets the Torah—even if he possesses Torah learning and good deeds—has no share in the world-to-come.[5]

84. R. Akiva said: The traditionally fixed text of Scripture is a [protective] fence for Torah, tithes are a fence for wealth, vows a fence for abstinence. For wisdom, silence is a fence.[6]

85. R. Eleazar ben Azariah said: When there is no study of Torah, there is no proper conduct; when there is no proper conduct, there is no study of Torah. When there is no wisdom, there is no fear [of God]; when there is no fear [of God], there is no wisdom. When there is no understanding, there is no knowledge; when there is no knowledge, there is no understanding. When there is no flour [for bread], there is no study of Torah; when there is no study of Torah, there is no bread.[7]

86. Ben Zoma said: Who is wise? He who is willing to learn from all men, as is written, "Because of all, who taught me, I gained insight" (Ps. 119:99). Who is mighty? He who subdues his impulse to evil, as is written, "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city" (Prov. 16:32). Who is rich? He who is happy with his portion, as is written, "When thou art content to eat the labor of thy hands, happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee" (Ps. 128:2): "happy shalt thou be" in this world, "and it shall be well with thee" in the world-to-come. Who is honored? He who honors others, as is written, "For them that honor Me [by honoring mankind created in My image] I will honor, and they who despise Me shall be lightly esteemed" (1 Sam. 2:30).[8]

87. Ever since pleasure seekers have multiplied, justice has come to be subverted,[9] human conduct has deteriorated, and God has no satisfaction in the world.

Ever since they who display partiality in judgment have multiplied, the command "Ye shall not be afraid of the face of any man" (Deut. 1:17) has become void; the command "Ye shall not respect persons in judgment" (ibid.) has ceased to be obeyed; people have thrown off the yoke of Heaven and have placed upon themselves the yoke of mortals.

Ever since they who convey whispered hints to judges have multiplied, [God's] fierce anger has so greatly increased against Israel that the Presence has departed [from them] because, as Scripture says, "God standeth in the congregation of God only when He judgeth among the judges" (Ps. 82:1).

Ever since [men of whom it is said], "Their heart goeth after their gain" (Ezek. 33:31), have multiplied, they "who call evil good and good evil" (Isa. 5:20) have also multiplied.

Ever since men "who call evil good and good evil" have multiplied, cries of "woe!"[10] have increased in the world.

Ever since men who ostentatiously draw in their spittle have multiplied, the arrogant have increased, disciples have become few, and Torah has had to go about looking for people to study it.

Ever since men who make much of their outer appearance have multiplied, the daughters of Israel have begun to marry such men, because our generation looks only to the outward appearance.

Ever since judges who force their goods upon householders and make them trade in their behalf have multiplied, bribery, as well as miscarriage of justice, has increased and fairness [in justice] has ceased.

Ever since judges who say, "I accept your favor," and, "I shall appreciate your favor," have multiplied, there has been an increase of "every man doing that which is right in his own eyes" (Judg. 17:6); low persons have been raised to eminence; the eminent have been brought low; and the kingdom [of Israel] has continued to deteriorate.

Ever since the niggardly have multiplied, despoilers of the poor have also multiplied, and so have those who harden their hearts and close their hands from lending to the needy, thus transgressing what is written in the Torah: "Beware that there be not a base thought in thy heart" (Deut. 15:9).

Ever since people eager to accept gifts have multiplied, the days [of human life] have become fewer, even as the years have been shortened: "It is he that spurneth gifts who shall live" (Prov. 15:27).

Ever since the haughty of heart have multiplied, controversies have increased in Israel. Ever since disciples of Shammai and of Hillel who had not ministered sufficiently to their teachers have multiplied, controversies have increased in Israel and the Torah has become like two [contradictory] Torahs.

Ever since those willing to accept charity from Gentiles have multiplied, Israel has sunk to the bottom, while Gentiles have risen to the top; Israel has gone backward, while Gentiles have come forward.[1]

88. "And they dwelt there" (Gen. 11:2). R. Isaac said: Whenever people seek to dwell [in tranquility], Satan leaps in [to disrupt]. R. Helbo said: Whenever you find contentment, Satan levels charges. R. Levi said: Whenever you find [too much] eating and drinking, Satan levels charges.[2]

89. "All the days of the poor are evil" (Prov. 15:15) refers, according to R. Hanina, to one who has an evil wife. "But he that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast" (ibid.) refers to a man who has a good wife.

R. Yannai said: "All the days of the poor are evil" refers to one who is overly fastidious. "But he that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast" refers to one who is of a more balanced disposition.

R. Yohanan said: "One who so grieves[3] [for the suffering of others] that [he deems] all his days blemished," is truly compassionate. "But he whose heart is so merry that he is continually feasting" is [uncaring, indeed,] cruel.

However, R. Joshua ben Levi said: "All the days of the poor [in spirit] are evil" refers to one who is ungenerous. "But he that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast" refers to one who is generous.[4]

90. "When a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him" (Prov. 16:7). "Enemy," said R. Yohanan, refers to a man's wife. "To a snake," said Samuel. "To the impulse to evil," said R. Joshua ben Levi. R. Berekhiah said: In saying "even his enemies," Scripture includes pests in a man's house, such as gnats, fleas, and flies.[5]

91. Happy is the man whose wife is from his own city, whose source of Torah learning is from his own city, and whose livelihood is from his own city.[6]

92. The sages taught in the name of R. Meir: He who is a permanent resident in the Land of Israel, eats his [daily]—[nonsacral]—food in ritual purity, speaks Hebrew, and recites the Shema morning and evening may be certain that life in the world-to-come will be his.[7]

93. The merit in attending a [Torah] lecture is in the running [to hear it]. The merit in attending a Kallah[8] session is in [the willingness to endure] the crush. The merit in listening to a halakhic tradition is in the reasoning it stimulates. The merit in attending a house of mourning is in the silence imposed. The merit in a fast is the [required] giving of charity. The merit of a eulogy is in the [listeners'] loud lament in response. The merit in attending a wedding is in the good wishes expressed to the bride and groom.[9]

94. Rava asked Rabbah bar Mari: Where does the proverb "When the thorn is ravaged, so is the cabbage" come from?

Rabbah bar Mari: From the verse "Wherefore will ye contend with Me? Ye all have transgressed against Me, saith the Lord" (Jer. 2:29).[10]

"Wherever the poor goes, poverty tags along"?

Rabbah bar Mari: We have been taught: "The rich bring their firstfruits in baskets overlaid with silver and gold; while the poor bring them in wicker baskets made of peeled willow branches, and give both baskets and fruits to the priests" (Bik 3:8).

"Sixty men may run but not catch up with him who has a meal early in the morning"?

"When your friend calls you an ass, put a saddle on your back"?

Rabbah bar Mari: From the verse "And he said: 'Hagar, slave of Sarai, whence camest thou? and whither goest thou?' And she said: 'I flee from the face of my mistress Sarai' " (Gen. 16:8).

"If there is anything unfavorable in you, be the first to admit it"?

Rabbah bar Mari: From "[Eliezer] said: I am Abraham's slave" (Gen. 24:34).

"Though a duck keeps its head down while walking, its eyes range far and wide"?

Rabbah bar Mari: From "[Aware of what was to happen to David], Abigail said to him: 'When the Lord shall have dealt well with my lord, then remember thy handmaid' " (1 Sam. 25:31).

"Sixty pains afflict the tooth that sees another tooth chomping while it does not"?

Rabbah bar Mari: [Nathan, who saw Adonijah's men eat and drink, said ruefully], "But me, even me thy servant . . . hath he not called" (1 Kings 1:26).

"A hungry dog will swallow his own excrement"?

Rabbah bar Mari: From "The full soul loatheth a honeycomb; but to the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet" (Prov. 27:7).

"A bad date palm will make its way to a grove of barren trees"?

Rabbah bar Mari: This matter is dealt with in the Five Books, repeated in the Prophets, said again in the Writings, taught in the Mishnah, and repeated in a Baraita. In the Five Books: "Esau went to Ishmael" (Gen. 28:9). In the Prophets: "Men of low character gathered about Jephthah and went out raiding with him" (Judg. 11:3). In the Writings: "Every bird dwells with its own kind, even as men with his like" (Ecclesiasticus 13:19). In the Mishnah: "Anything joined to what is susceptible to uncleanness is itself susceptible to uncleanness, and what is joined to what is not susceptible to uncleanness is itself not susceptible to uncleanness" (Kel 12:2). In a Baraita: "R. Eliezer said: Not for naught did the starling to go the raven—it is, after all, its kind."

"If you summon your neighbor [to have a dispute arbitrated] and he will not respond, you may use any means[2] to get from him what belongs to you"?

Rabbah bar Mari: From "Because I have purged thee and thou wast not purged of thine uncleanness, thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more, till I have satisfied My fury upon thee" (Ezek. 24:13).

"Do not throw a stone into the well from which you once drank"?

"When we were young, we were treated as men, but now that we have grown old, we are treated as children"?

Rabbah bar Mari: In the beginning it is said, "The Lord went before them . . . to lead them the way" (Exod. 13:21). But in the end God said to Israel, "Behold, I send an angel before thee, to guard thee on the way" (Exod. 23:20).

"Be ready to pull even chips of wood behind a man of wealth"?

Rabbah bar Mari: From "Lot also, who went with Abram, had flocks, and herds, and tents" (Gen. 13:5).[3]

95. The following is a tradition from our forebears, the Men of the Great Assembly: whenever Scripture says, "And it came to pass (va-yehi)," it means that there was trouble.[4]

96. The sages said to R. Perida: "R. Ezra, the grandson of R. Avtolas, who was the tenth generation from R. Eleazar ben Azariah, who in his turn was the tenth generation of Ezra, is standing at the door." R. Perida: "Why such a recital of forebears? If he is a man of Torah, it is well. If he is both a man of Torah and a scion of distinguished ancestors, it is doubly well. However, if he is merely a scion of distinguished forebears but not a man of Torah, may fire consume him." The sages: "He is a man of Torah." R. Perida: "Then let him come in." When he entered, R. Perida saw that R. Ezra was troubled. So R. Perida began to discourse on the verse "I have said unto the Lord: 'Thou art my Lord!' But My gratitude, [God answered], is not to thee" (Ps. 16:2). Then R. Perida went on: The congregation of Israel said to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, show gratitude to me having made You known in the world." God replied, "My gratitude is not to you, but to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who first made Me known to the world." As the next verse says, "The holy that are in the earth, they are the mighty in whom is all My delight" (Ps. 16:3). As soon as R. Ezra heard the word "mighty," he began an allocution, saying:

> Let the Mighty come and for the sake of the mighty requite the mighty by means of the mighty.[5]
> Let the beloved, scion of the beloved, come and build
> A beloved house for the Beloved in the beloved's portion,
> Where the beloved may procure atonement.[6]
> Let the good come and receive the good from the Good for the sake of the good.[7]
> Let this one come and receive this Torah from
> This Unique One for the sake of this people.[8]

97. [When a meal was over, and it was time for the young disciples to leave], the maidservant of the household of Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] would speak in enigmatic language and say:

> The dipper is already knocking at the sides of the empty jug.
> Let the young eagles fly to their eyries.

When she wished them to sit down for a meal, she would say:

> If need be, let the stopper be pulled out even from a second jug,

When R. Yose bar Asyan spoke in enigmatic language, he would say, "Prepare for me tordin, "beets," with hardal, "mustard that the poor use."[1]

When he would ask an innkeeper what the menu for the day was, he would say:

The one here—is raw[2] with hunger,
What tasty morsels are there?

When R. Abbahu spoke in enigmatic language, he would say:

Make the coal [glow] like etrogim,
Then make the golden glow sky-blue,
And prepare for me two cocks who during thick darkness announce [the dawn]."[3]

98. A certain disciple sitting before R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the course of an exposition: Job never was, never came into being—he is merely a parable. R. Samuel: To such as you, Scripture retorts, "There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job" (Job 1:1).

The disciple: But then, what of "The poor man had nothing, save one little ewe lamb," etc. (2 Sam. 12:3)? Was there such a poor man? No; the story of the poor man is a parable, even as the story of Job is a parable.[4]

99. We have been taught: "In the middle of the altar there was a mound of ash, whose bulk at times was as much as three hundred kor."[5] "This," said Rava, "is hyperbole."

"They gave a lamb about to be the daily offering a drink from a cup of gold." "This," said Rava, "is hyperbole."

R. Ammi said: The Five Books used hyperbole. The Prophets used hyperbole. The sages used hyperbole, as we have just mentioned. The Five Books used hyperbole, as in the verse "The cities are great and fortified up to heaven" (Deut. 1:28). The Prophets used hyperbole, as in the verse "The earth was split open by the uproar" (1 Kings 1:40).

R. Isaac bar Nahmani said in the name of Samuel: Of three matters, the sages used hyperbole—of the mound on the altar, the vine, and the Temple curtain. The mound, as we have mentioned above. The vine, as we have been taught: At the entrance to the Temple Hall, there stood a vine, trellised over columns and laden with gold; for whoever presented a berry or a cluster of golden grapes would bring it and hang it there. [So abundant was the gold on the vine], said R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok, that on one occasion three hundred priests were assigned to clear it.

The curtain, as we have been taught: R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said in the name of R. Simeon, deputy [high priest]: The curtain[6] was a handbreadth thick and was woven on seventy-two strands, each strand consisting of twenty-four threads. Its length was forty cubits and its breadth twenty cubits, made up in its entirety of eighty-two myriads [of threads]. They used to make two curtains every year, and three hundred priests were needed to immerse them.[7]

100. Samuel said: In the Sanctuary, there was a [musical instrument called] a magrefah. It had ten holes, each of which produced ten different kinds of pitches. Thus, it produced one hundred different kinds of pitches altogether.

[In a differing tradition], the sages taught in a Baraita: The instrument was one cubit long and one cubit high. A handle projected from it which had ten holes, each producing one hundred different kinds of pitches. Thus, it produced one thousand different kinds of pitches.

R. Nahman bar Isaac said: You are to remember who is prone to such hyperbole: [Not the Mishnah, but] the Baraita exaggerates.[8]

101. The sages said to R. Hamnuna: R. Ammi wrote out four hundred Torah scrolls. R. Hamnuna: Are you sure he didn't copy just the words "Moses commanded us the Torah" (Deut. 33:4) four hundred times?

Rava said to R. Zera: R. Yannai planted four hundred vineyards. R. Zera: Are you sure these "vineyards" weren't of [the minimal definition], namely, two pairs of vines facing each other, with one vine jutting out as a kind of tail?[9]

102. Ulla said: Italy of the idolaters is the great city of Rome, which covers an area of three hundred parasangs by three hundred parasangs. In it are three hundred and sixty-five marketplaces, corresponding to the days of the solar year. The smallest of them—that of the poultry sellers—is sixteen mil by sixteen mil. Every day the emperor dines in one of them. Whoever lives in the city, even if not born there, receives a daily portion of food from the emperor's palace. So, too, does he who was born there receive such a daily portion from the emperor's palace, even if he no longer lives there. In the city are three thousand bathhouses whose five hundred [tall] flues convey their smoke beyond the city wall. One side of the city is bounded by the sea, another side by mountains and hills, a third side by a barrier of iron, and a fourth side by sand dunes and swamps.[10]

HAYIM NAHMAN BIALIK (1873–1934) was the poet of the Jewish national renaissance. Born in the Hasidic environment of northern Ukraine, he moved to Odessa in 1891, where he was drawn to Ahad Ha'am and the circle of intellectuals involved in creating a modern Jewish culture. In 1921, he left Soviet Russia for Berlin and emigrated to Palestine in 1924.

YEHOSHUA HANA RAVNITZKY (1859–1944) was an early Zionist publicist and pioneer of modern Hebrew journalism and publishing. A native of Odessa, he became Bialik's first patron and later his closest collaborator. Together they founded the publishing house of Moriah, which brought forth the first edition of Sefer Ha-Aggadah in 1908–11. Ravnitzky settled in Tel Aviv in 1921, where he and Bialik subsequently founded the Dvir Publishing House.

WILLIAM G. (GERSHON ZEV) BRAUDE (1907–1988) was born in Telz, a center of Lithuanian Jewish learning, and emigrated to America in 1920. After being ordained at Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati and earning his Ph.D. at Brown University, he served as Rabbi of Congregation Sons of Israel and David, Temple Beth El, in Providence, Rhode Island. Through a series of major translations, including Midrash on Psalms, Pesikta Rabbati, Pesikta De-Rab Kahana, and Tanna Debe Eliyyahu, he established a reputation as a leading interpreter of classical rabbinic literature.

DAVID STERN, who wrote the Introduction for this volume, is Associate Professor in the Department of Oriental Studies at the University of Pennsylvania. He is the author of Parables in Midrash: The Intersection of Narrative and Exegesis in Rabbinic Literature and co-editor with Mark J. "To have Book of Legends/Sefer Ha-Aggadah available in English is to open to the entire English-reading world—Jew, non-Jew, religionist, secularist—one of the very great creations of humankind: a rich and intricately woven tapestry of tales, homilies, legends and dreams that come to us from the very roots of the imagination. What a treasure!"

—CHAIM POTOK

"Bialik and Ravnitzky's great compendium of Rabbinic legend and homily has been an indispensable resource ever since its publication in Hebrew eight decades ago....English readers are very fortunate to be able at last to avail themselves of this extraordinary compilation."

—ROBERT ALTER

"In translating Bialik and Ravnitzky's incomparable thematic anthology into very readable English, William Braude, master translator of Rabbinic texts, has provided the English reader with a wonderful access to the wealth of Rabbinic interpretation and lore. This book should be a fixture in the library of every serious Jew."

—NORMAN J. COHEN, Dean, Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion

"Sefer Ha-Aggadah has long been one of my favorite volumes of Jewish literature. Bialik and Ravnitzky arranged topically a vast collection of Talmudic and midrashic material. Whatever one is looking for, be it stories about biblical characters or reflections on love, evil, childrearing, or healing, it is there....
A most welcome addition to the growing collection of Jewish classics now available in English translation."

—JUDITH HAUPTMAN, Associate Professor of Talmud, Jewish Theological Seminary
